An ordinary man usually thinks it a very easy thing to run a grocery. Easy to stand behind a counter all day? Of Course. It doesn't look to be very hard, but just wait until a crank comes into the store with a frown on his face; next a taster who tastes and prices for half an hour, and gets a good square meal and doesn't buy a cent's worth, says an exchange. Then others come in and tell you how much cheaper other stores are selling groceries and refuse to trade with you unless you cut. Then comes an order over the 'phone thick and fast in a woman's high-keyed voice, who rings off without giving her name. In an hour or two she rings you up again and asks why you haven't sent those groceries. While you are explaining matters to her in comes a man who sings off an order of flour, potatoes, sugar, coffee, etc., and who shoots out of the door and down the street. If you haven't caught the order you are expected to guess at it; then there is a roar.

Next comes a man who wants credit. He has traded at other stores and paid cash, and now has a job where he gets his pay only every two weeks. He pays promptly for several weeks, then he has a small balance. This keeps on for a while and finally his bill is all balance.

The next customer who comes in and asks for credit you politely ask where he traded last. He says: "I used to trade at Mr. A.'s, but he cheated me, so I thought I would try you."

"Shall I call Mr. A. and ask him if you are all right?" I ask. "No, you needn't go to that trouble," he says. "I don't have to trade here." And he goes out and slams the door. Just to satisfy yourself you call up Mr. A. and find that he owes $100.

Then there is this kind of a customer—a man who has always paid cash, who meets with reverses and asks you for credit. You can't turn him down, as he has been a good customer. You let him have the goods. The bill keeps growing larger and larger and finally gets so large the man goes elsewhere to trade. Then you are out again.

I have found that the man who owes the largest bill is the one who can take in all the theatres, circuses and excursions.

Then there is the customer who rings up just before dinner and wants you to deliver a package of yeast foam 13 blocks away at once.

Another thing we have to contend with is the girl who comes in to call up her sweetheart and talks for 15 or 20 minutes when our regular customers are waiting to use the telephone.—Grocers' Advocate.

SELL WHOLEHEARTEDLY.

Do you really believe that you pay sufficient attention to the art of salesmanship in your daily transactions?

In the retail grocery business, it is a fact, that too many merchants, take it for granted that their customers come into the store to purchase certain things, and when supplied with those articles or their equivalent, there is, no necessity for any further effort to sell some other commodity.

A writer who takes a keen interest in the art of salesmanship as practiced by the retail merchants, states in an exchange, that he has been making trips to various stores in his home city recently, buying small articles, one at a place, solely for the purpose of studying the methods of salesmen. They are pitifully wanting. In ten stores visited only one salesman made any real, wholehearted effort to sell goods not asked for. We did not resist his blandishments, but bought several additional articles. By eight of the others the article requested was produced and wrapped up, the change given, and that ended the transaction. In the ninth the salesman inquired in a perfunctory manner, "Is there anything more?" There is need for a stirring up in stores among the salesmen. This is not the way to make a record as a clerk nor is it the way which leads to promotion and independence. Not one of the ten was rude or discourteous. Not one showed neglect. But only one made a real effort to interest the buyer in other goods. He did it in an intelligent manner.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

With the wave of warm weather which is prevailing fairly generally throughout Eastern Canada at the present time some considerable activity has been engendered in the butter and cheese markets. From reports received from the country the pasturage is improving very rapidly, indeed, and the cows are beginning to display evidence of this favor of nature. During the last week prices for butter and cheese have eased off considerably, quotations to The Grocer for fresh creamery being around 24c as against 26½c and 27c for the same time last week. Dairy tubs are now at 17c and 18c, instead of 21c to 24c as last week. Fresh, large rolls have also joined in the downward tendency, now being quoted at 20c to 21c, as against 22c and 23c for last week. There is a feeling among dealers that the prices are going to continue in their downward tendency, therefore, many of them are holding back to take advantage of this anticipated condition. This together with the fact that supplies are arriving in large amounts from the country, has depressed the prices to their present low levels.

Cheese has fairly well duplicated the behaviour of butter during the past week and is much lower. Large, new cheese is now quoted to The Grocer at 11¾c to 12c, as against 12c to 12¼c last week, and new cheese (twins), which was selling at 12¼c to 12½c last week is now quoted at 12c to 12¼c. Old cheese remains practically the same at 15c to 15½c to the retailer.

The demand in the cheese market cannot be said to be more than fair. The Board of Trade receipts for the week ending May 16 for butter were 2,391 packages, as against 3,710 packages for the corresponding period last year, while the total up to the same time is 4,118 packages against last year's total of 10,651 packages for the same period.

Cheese receipts show the same condition of affairs, practically.

For the week ending May 16, total receipts were 15,794 boxes, as against 25,954 boxes for the corresponding period last year. The totals compare unfavorably also, being up to the present time 36,798 boxes, as against 56,915 boxes for the total of last year. The shipments of cheese to the Old Country have been very small during the past week as compared to the two previous seasons, showing a falling off of nearly two thirds for the corresponding week of last year.

According to advices from England there is not much interest displayed in the Canadian market, as the lethargy which seems to have taken hold of them appears to still hold them in its grasp There is very little of the Canadian product in England, and the small shipments which are arriving there will not alter this situation if the production here does not soon improve.

In Brockville there was not much activity displayed at the recent Board meeting, and buyers and sellers held widely divergent views in regard to prices. These conditions lead to decidedly slow bidding. The uniform offer for choice of 10¾c was turned down by the sellers, so the Board was closed without any sales being effected.

Shipments of cheese from Montreal for the last week make a very poor showing compared with the same week of the previous year. For the week shipments to Great Britain were 11,413 boxes, as compared with 32,758 boxes for the same week of the previous year. Total exports since May 1 are 49,970 boxes as compared with 74,919 boxes for the corresponding period of last year.

THE PROVISION SITUATION

There has been little change in conditions in the Canadian packing industry since last week. The English market remains stagnant and with the continued heavy imports of Danish bacon is not at all encouraging for the sale of Canadian pork products, and while some export business has been done during the past week by one or two firms, this has been at a disadvantage and has not been at all general. Not only does the condition of the English market affect this trade. At present the number of hogs coming in is not much more than sufficient to provide for the provincial demand which has been fairly active during the past week and until this is supplied there is not much chance of doing export business.

There is always a demand for a certain amount of Canadian bacon on the British market, but of late supplies have been short and holders are sustaining high prices.

The whole matter seems to fall back on the Canadian farmer who is certainly seriously neglecting his opportunities as regards hog raising. If the farmer continues to pursue the same policy he has done for the past year or so, Canada's bacon trade in England, decreasing as it has been, will become practically nil.

A correspondent, writing from England recently, regarding the matter, says: "It seems to be the case that the Canadians think that to sell at big prices even for a small amount is the best plan. The Danish and Irish shippers are satisfied to work on the opposite basis."

The way the Danish farmers and shippers appreciate the opportunity afforded by the British market and the manner they have built up this trade, has been shown by the continued heavy shipments, aggregating 37,000 to 54,000 weekly, during the past few months. The United States packers also have been doing heavy business, but this has fallen off seriously lately on account of significant local conditions. Conditions prevalent in American markets are given in the following summary from the New York Journal of Commerce:

"There has been very little interest in these markets within the last week, either legitimate or speculative. Receipts of hogs have been larger and prices lower both east and west, but demand has not been stimulated by the decline. Packers have favored lower hogs and bought sparingly at the same time, not supporting the market for products, though not selling sufficiently to produce much decline. The shorts have been about the only buyers of futures and that demand has not been general, leaving the markets very dull. Spot demand has been no better than for some weeks past and prices have weakened on all articles, both speculative and non-speculative. Exporters have practically been out of the market except for a little city lard, while a leading refiner said he never knew it duller. Nobody is buying anything but for immediate wants and this characterizes the whole trade, causing a depressed feeling. The increased receipts of hogs have been attributed in part to the weather being so wet that the farmer could not plant his corn and has marketed hogs more freely. The larger proportion of light weights and smaller proportion of heavy weights seem to indicate that they are marketing quite freely, especially as corn keeps advancing and offers a bigger inducement to sell than to feed, though the receipts of corn have not materially increased, owing to bad roads and wet weather."

Local packers this week are offering $5.75 to $5.85 f.o.b., with a slight tendency to firmness. For hogs off cars at factory, $6.10 is offered. Deliveries are light with apparently no prospects of improvement.

BUTTER—A fairly sharp decline may be recorded in the butter market, which is due to the increasing supply, and to the fact that dealers are not buying more than is necessary for their immediate needs, all anticipating a still greater decline if they wait a little while. Roll butter is plentiful and the prices are much lower.

PROVISIONS—The market is quiet this week and prices remain unchanged, except that dressed hogs have dropped half a cent. The prospect is only fair, though it is expected a few warm days will dissipate whatever gloom seems to pervade the trade. Sales are made in small quantities only, the buyers hoping and waiting for lower prices later on.

BUTTER—A drop of one cent in almost every grade of butter is reported this week. The supplies are fair, but the demand is light. Changes are expected during the week and traders are buying economically because of the tendency towards lower prices. Very little, if any, creamery solids are being offered. The following prices prevail on the market at present:

EGGS—Like butter, traders are holding out for lower prices, and the prospect is that egg prices will decline within the week. They are at present firm, and though the demand is rather light the supply is increasing daily and is at present more than the demand. Prices are the same as reported last week.

HONEY—A light demand prevails and though last season's output was small, supplies on the market seem sufficient for the demands made. Honey is firm in price, considering the competition with maple syrup and the small number of inquiries received compared with a year ago.

POULTRY—The market for poultry is again opening up and quite a few lots of fowl have been offered during the week. The turkey gobblers are not so good as they will be later on, being a little flobby on the breast, and are, consequently, marked lower in price, but spring chickens are in splendid condition.

Cereals and Confectionery

The past year has been a rather remarkable one in the flour markets of the world, due to certain circumstances in the wheat production which had its inevitable result on the flour markets.

The most salient feature of the last season's wheat production was the general shortage in the crop of the world, and especially Canada, and the United States.

While this condition was most marked here and in the United States, Russia, India and the Argentine all failed to produce enough to fill up the deficiency caused by the shortcomings of the former countries, and the result was higher prices for wheat. No sooner was this fact well established than the flour market commenced its upward climb, and with almost mathematical precision the price has mounted higher and higher until the close of the last season, when firsts were quoted at $6.10 a barrel, and seconds at $5.50, as compared with $4.60 a barrel for firsts, and $4.10 for seconds for the previous year. These advances, which finally led to the above high quotations, were generally from 10 to 20 cents at a time. Notwithstanding the shortage in Canada of wheat, there was an increase in exportations of flour of 143.959 sacks and 3,558 barrels. The year's export returns were 1,128,256 sacks and 182,333 barrels.

At the present time markets in all lines of flour and cereals are very quiet. The high basis at which flour is held practically prohibits any export business and with light demand from local markets and very light deliveries of supplies there is not much to talk or write about.

Reports of good prospects for all grain crops are being received with enthusiasm as an earnest of better business later on.

FOLEY BROS. SOLE OWNERS.

Winnipeg Wholesale Firm Loses Partners.

Important changes have been made in the wholesale grocery firm Foley, Lock & Larson, Winnipeg. The Lock brothers in the firm have sold their interest to the Foley brothers and have retired from the business. Foley brothers are now the sole owners and proprietors of the business.

About five years ago the wholesale grocery firm of Foley, Lock & Larson commenced business in Winnipeg. The members of the firm included Peter Larson, four Foley brothers, John, Thomas, Timothy and M. D., and four Lock brothers, T. H. Lock, W. G. Lock, J. A. Lock and A. S. Lock. During the last few months three members of the firm have died, Peter Larson and John and Thomas Foley. By the present arrangement Timothy and M. D. Foley, who reside in St. Paul, are the sole owners of the business. They are large railway contractors with thousands of men engaged in work on the G.T.P. contracts.

In addition to their wholesale grocery and fruit business, Foley, Lock & Larson have built up a big manufacturing business in biscuits and confectionery.

H. C. Beckett, of W. H. Gillard & Co., Hamilton, is making an extensive business trip through the Canadian West.

Mooney's Perfection Cream Sodas

are the sodas which particular people insist on having. That's why more grocers sell Mooney's than sell any other brand. To sell one box of Mooney's to an appreciative customer is to create at once an active demand. They are the self-advertising sodas. Their delicious, lasting crispness is their recommendation.

The Grocer's Confectionery Department

HINTS FOR BUILDING UP PROFITABLE BUSINESS.

There seems to be a tendency in a good many grocery stores at present to neglect the confectionery department. Some grocers pay no attention to this whatever, and a good many others, who do carry a small stock, leave the department to take care of itself and as a consequence what little business they did have dwindles away. This is a serious mistake.

A Lesson From the Druggists.

What the grocers are losing in this respect the drug stores are gaining and it is a lesson to see how extensively Canadian druggists are taking up the confectionery trade. This is something the grocer should not let escape him and he need not if the business is properly handled. There is no reason why a young man, say on a Saturday evening, after getting his half-dozen oranges at the grocer's, to do him over Sunday, should call at the drug store two doors down for a couple of packages of chocolates.

The Children's Trade.

A good many grocers wil say: "Oh, I can't be bothered with the stuff. The youngsters come in for a cent's worth of trash and it takes more time than it's worth."

While there's a good deal in this there's another consideration, and that is, that if you get the youngsters coming to your store the fathers and mothers are pretty sure to come, sooner or later, and, looking at it from this standpoint, it pays to treat the youngsters pretty well also. Whether the benefit derived from this fact is large enough to pay for the trouble it causes is something the grocer will have to settle for himself. In some stores the middle of the forenoons and afternoons are rather slack times and it is then when the most of this juvenile purchasing is done.

An Example Quoted.

But if the retailer does not care to bother with this class of business there are other ways in which good profits can be realized. A store which comes to mind at the moment, and which does a mighty fine business, too, carries a line of first-class chocolates in a show case placed suggestively near the door so that one can't well get in or out of the door without seeing them. The goods are arranged tastily in a fair-sized show case and the various piles of the different lines are kept clean and tempting in appearance. Only good chocolates are sold and the name of the maker, a name that carries weight, is well displayed. Many a half-pound of these goods has found its way into the writer's pocket before he left the store, even though he had no thought of them when entering. The sight of the goods, like the "fizz" to a soda fountain, created a hankering and after all, that's the best part of the sale.

This is simply quoted as an instance of what one bright store does. That confectionery department certainly pays It requires little attention beyond keeping the goods looking fresh and dainty, which can be done in odd moments.

Some Hints.

The stock carried should not be large in order that they may be sold before they get stale. This is not such a hard thing, either, as a good many suppose. Really good chocolates require a little time to ripen and if they are gotten from the manufacturer a short time after dipping they can be kept several months without any deterioration. Don't expect to sell chocolates, though, which have been lying around your store in a pasteboard box absorbing foreig odors and drying up for a year.

The matter of wrapping, too, is one that will repay attention. Don't put good chocolates, or in fact, any good candy in a bag. Its enough to shock its self-respect and the results, particularly in warm weather, are likely to be unsatisfactory to the customer. Boxes labelled with your own name are not prohibitory in cost, if a fair order is given. These are preferable to buying the ready-filled boxes in two or three ways. First, the customer sees the box filled and is quite satisfied as to the freshness of the goods. Second, you can often give the buyers a choice of various lines they like which they would not get in the ready-filled boxes. Third, your own name on the box is, if you sell really good candy, a bit of cracking good advertising which you might as well have.

If the customer has lots of time don't handle the goods with your fingers or, least of all, with a scoop, but take a small pair of candy tongs which come in workable shape with the larger boxes The moral effect of all this trouble is well worth while.

Seasonable Suggestions.

It is at holiday time, of course, when the confectionery department has its biggest chance, but other times offer good opportunity. Lots of people do a deal of buying on Saturday night, and usually take home some candy of some kind for the Sunday treat. Here's a chance to get in a good suggestion and to dispose of many a choice half-pound.

It will help, too, to keep changing to new lines and to let the people know about them. A certain class of customers are always looking for novelties, even in luxuries, and the mere mention of a new line of candy makes these people anxious to test it.

Some of the best fun the writer has had in the way of an outing has been toasting marshmallows over the hot coals of a camp fire in the country. Why not lay in a stock of these and make a suggestion of the kind to people you know are preparing for a picnic. It should be very easy to send half a pound along with the bottle of olives and the ham for the sandwiches. Be sure the marshmallows are fresh, though, or they won't give satisfaction.

The summer season offers a good chance to develop the confectionery department. Visitors are always more or less numerous in every town and they nearly all are ready to buy a box of chocolates particularly if they are made to think about it. A tasty window display occasionally might help. Don't let the sun get at the goods, though, or woe betide them.

The smaller package goods, such as the drug stores are beginning to handle should also show a good profit. Don't get too many lines of these but stick to a few good ones which represent fair value.

If the confectionery department is studied and given an amount of attention commensurate with its importance it should be a source of satisfactory profit in the general run of groceries.

ANOTHER INDUSTRY FOR CHILLIWACK.

Messrs. Fiedenhagen and Wetzel, of the Mount Vernon Condensed Cream Co., a United States concern, are endeavoring to interest dairymen about Chilliwack, B.C., in the matter of a condensed cream plant there. The company wish to manufacture and sell in Canada to escape paying the present duty of $1.50 per case.

Fruits, Vegetables and Fish

Pretty good business is now being done in the different lines. The weather is more favorable and as the days grow warmer a greater variety of fruits, vegetables and fish is offering.

Although the markets do not show the activity of a year ago in that the demand is not so heavy, for which our old enemy "Financial Stringency," is held responsible, the quality and quantity of goods offering is fully equal to that of a year ago, and the prices are much easier.

The navel orange season is about done and there is a consequent tightening in price. Valencias, too, are a little stiffer, in Toronto, at least, but the recent sale of 11,000 boxes in Montreal should bring down the price again. Lemons are firm, with a very good quality being offered for sale. Pineapples and bananas are coming in freely and the former are being taken up not a little by the housewife for preserving. Strawberries continue firm, though sales are frequent and large quantities are on the market. The feature of the market is the first arrival of this season's cherries. They come by express from California and are more of a novelty than a selling line. Cocoanuts, too, are new, and Canadian rhubarb has completely displaced the southern States variety. Strawberries are now coming from Missouri and Alabama.

Canadian early vegetables are now arriving more freely and already we have new Canadian onions, carrots, celery, lettuce, cucumbers, radishes, spinach, and asparagus on the market. These will supplant the green lines we have been importing from the southern and eastern States. New potatoes are easier and the old variety are firm. Florida tomatoes are nearly over and though the prices are much higher, the demand is still good. Cabbage has come dome some more, but there are rumors of an advance, though we are unable to find any reason in the rumor. Beans of all varieties are now being offered and small lots of cauliflower, too, are seen.

The brook trout season is now open and these and all fresh lines are being asked for more frequently daily. In fact, in the interior markets they have quite displaced the competing lines of standard varieties. The market is fair and the outlook bright. Fresh salmon is high on account of the dearth of supply from both the Pacific and Atlantic coasts. In the larger fish centres the market prices remain about the same.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—Pineapples have experienced a considerable decline since the last quotations, now being quoted at from $3 to $3.25. Strawberries have not altered during the week, with the exception of a lower minimum price by one cent. Other lines remain practically the same. Dealers report a fair business passing. Express cherries are now arriving in small lots from the south. They will be coming in by freight in a few days.

FISH—Fresh salmon continues high owing to the fact that there is nothing arriving from the Pacific coast, and eastern salmon is not yet plentiful. These two conditions continue to keep the price very high. Oysters have eased off a little, choice Malpeques now selling for $5. They were quoted around $6 at our last quotation. Haddock also has declined in price slightly. Otherwise the fish market remains about the same as last week.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—A more than fair business has been done during the past week, and activity seems to be the order around the market. Navel oranges are still going up with the end of the season in sight, and an advance of 50c is noted during the week in this line. Valencias are now being sold in half cases only, a slight advance in price being asked. The other varieties, principally Mediterranean lines, are priced about the same with an easier tendency in sight. The few Canadian apples yet left on the market are higher priced than last week, but pineapples and bananas are coming in well and are lowering in price. Cocoanuts, too, are arriving and the first California cherries are offered this week. Coming in small lots by express the price is rather high for the general trade and are more of a novelty than anything else as yet. Our own Canadian rhubarb seems to have completely shut out the imported article. Strawberries are arriving plentifully, but the prices remain rather firm.

VEGETABLES—From week to week we have to note new lines of Canadian green stuff being placed on the market. This week we have Canadian cucumbers and asparagus being offered. Old potatoes remain stationary in price and new potatoes are easier. Delawares were expected to go out rather freely for seed, but inquiry seems to show that the seeding is now over and our farmers seeded again with the Ontario variety. The farmers, as a rule, are rather conservative and perhaps feel it is better to try to raise a proven variety than to take chances on a kind that, though selling better, might not be so well adapted to Ontario soil.

As in the case of rhubarb, so it is with the early greens, and the imported varieties are being replaced gradually but surely with the Canadian kinds. Speaking generally, all the Canadian greens are easier and are coming on the market in increased quantity. Imported cabbage is much easier and a great many cases are offering.

FISH—Fair business and increasing supply of all kinds of fresh fish are ruling the market these days. Another tumble in prices is noted, an average of a cent being taken off nearly all lines. NEW FISH CAR.

The Intercolonial Railway Co. will, during the summer, one day a week, attach to their Maritime Express a special fish car. This innovation by the company is greatly appreciated by the dealers in Montreal, as it enables them to open their consignments in a much fresher condition than when they depended on slower methods of transportation. The new arrangement went into effect on Wednesday, May 12.

BUSINESS SOLD TO UNITED STATES CAPITALISTS.

Bright & Johnston, wholesale fruit merchants, Winnipeg, have sold their business to a number of American capitalists represented by Herbert Emery, of the Fruit Dispatch Co. A joint stock company, to be known as the Bright-Emery Co., will carry on the business in future.

LOW PRICES AT FRUIT SALE.

During the week ending May 16 two fruit auctions, which were the first of the season, were held. The first one was the cargo of oranges and lemons of the Danish SS. Nordboen. Unfortunately the stock on this boat did not turn out satisfactorily, owing to its bad condition. Large and extra large cases of oranges were sold at prices ranging between 75c and $2 per case, and the latter price was the highest figure reached

The small cases of oranges from the Nordboen which were in good, sound condition, brought from $1 to $1.75 per case being almost as much as the large cases. The stock was sent to Montreal on consignment and owing to the bad condition of the fruit sales were made with considerable difficulty.

The cargo of the S.S. Fremona was in prime condition with the result that the sale Friday was a greater success This boat had on board the enormous number of 65,000 coses of oranges and lemons, being one of the largest cargoes which have come into Montreal. Oranges brought from $1 to $2.25; half boxes, 75c to $1.50. Lemons, $1. to $2.50. Prices obtained Friday were from 25c to 50c better than New York prices.

Attractive Labels and Their Selling Effect

By H. A. SOMERVILLE, WATERVILLE, QUE.

Nowadays when everyone who has something to sell is striving after those means which may increase their sales a sharp outlook is kept for anything new, which is feverishly embraced and sometimes in the wild haste to conquer new fields and achieve new results, the old and primary essentials to a complete success are forgotten. Frequently these novel ideas present such alluring features that it is difficult to keep from falling a prey to their excesses and fantasies, whilst in some of them we recognize rediscovered truths presented in a new light.

Proof in Experience.

In a long experience as a grocer I have tried many experiments with more or less gratifying results, but from the sum it is not difficult to isolate a few of the more salient lessons which these experiments have taught. In this article I want to discuss the efficiency of the attractive label and package as a factor in helping to make a sale.

Now we appreciate the fundamental principles of good taste in any of the various phases of our experiences because it is gratifying to be the possessor of it and is highly pleasing to others, which, in an ordinary way, makes it present only a dual aspect whereas in this instance it will be shown to have a value commercially.

An Experiment With Labels.

To satisfy my conjectures in this respect I tried two experiments which proved conclusively the expediency of following this plan.

First, I placed two packages of raisins on the counter within the easy reach of any lady who might come in. These raisins were the same in price and so far as I could learn, the same in quality, but differed very largely in the package. One was cheap and tawdry in appearance, due to the decoration on it, while I am sure it was the more expensive of the two. The other package was clean and neat in its appearance with a simple trade mark in two colors and bearing the name of the packers.

Invariably, if the customer had no preferences, she would select the attractive, simple package.

Same Applied to Pickles.

To still further satisfy myself I placed two bottles of pickles on the counter. One bottle was the product of a house comparatively widely known in Canada, whose reputation had been founded on a basis of honesty and good value. Their bottle was of the orthodox style, round, with nothing original in its form and the label was cut into a meaningless shape and on its face was a wild riot of glaring colors not blended but thrust together quite oblivious of any proper color scheme whatever, and into this mad medly was introduced the usual legend about purity, and the name of the firm was almost indecipherable except on the closest scrutiny. I never doubted the veracity of their statement regarding the purity of their pickles and the vinegar in which they were packed, but sometimes it seemed to me it would have been a lesser felony to have employed a bleaching agent rather than preserve the distinctly dark appearance which they had.

In striking contrast was the other bottle, which was the product of a recently established house who had not yet had sufficient time to make a name and enjoy the prestige of an old institution; but they had been in business long enough to learn one valuable lesson, which was so well illustrated in the product which they knew would really adorn the shelves of some grocery store.

Their bottle and label were excellent and their pickles, light in color had a firm, fresh appearance, neatly packed and suspended in a crystal clear, lightly colored vinegar.

The bottle displayed originality and yet could not have been called freakish. It was square and smaller at the bottom than at the top, so well made that it had the appearance of cut glass with a top always neatly sealed. The label was extremely simple and very striking, conveying its message to those who looked upon it without a suggestion of confusion and without effort to decipher it It was plain, heavy, glazed white paper bearing in a good imitation of copper plate engraving the words "Mixed Pickles," and underneath the single word "Pure." These few words occupied the upper half of the label and the centre contained a heraldic design clear cut and definite, with the firm's name at the bottom, whilst running across the entire front in a similar style but larger and printed in violet was the name of the brand. In addition to these qualifications the utmost care had been exercised in pasting these labels on the bottles, as they were absolutely uniform in position.

As a result of my experiment I found that almost invariably the customer would select the bottle of pickles with the more attractive label, although I was fully convinced in my own mind that the quality of the former was slightly superior to the latter. However, this seemed to make no difference I have cited these two cases as examples and could mention numerous other cases where the sale of an article was greatly assisted by its appearance.

Light Colors Desirable.

In a store where no stock stands on the shelves for any length of time, the brightest effect may be obtained by displaying goods with light colored labels. One reason why white or light colored labels are best is the fact that they convey to the mind an idea of cleanliness. As regards cost, the simple white label relieved with one color or perhaps two, is much cheaper than the multicolored lithograph. Therefore, it should recommend itself to the manufacturers; but, what they must do is to display a little originality and good taste, and then they will have a label which will be quite as serviceable fifty years from now as at the present time. The art of putting goods up in attractive packages is the same as any other art. It is not necessarily the expenditure of vast sums of money which accomplish the best results, but the exercise of a little taste and judgment. It is always well to follow prevailing styles, but sometimes it pays to stand at a safe distance and exhibit a little originality rather than be continually shackled to this arbitrary dame. There is vast room for improvement among the manufacturers in this respect, and if they do bestir themselves they will find a wonderful return for their efforts because in the large majority of cases the purchaser is a woman and the same quality in her which makes her select a horse at a meet because it has a pretty name, will inevitably predispose her in favor of the product which has the nicer appearance.

CONTINUED EVAPORATIONS.

"Look here," said the indignant lady customer, "I bought a pound of evaporated peaches of you yesterday and when I got home I discovered that I only had about three-quarters of a pound. How do you account for it?"

"Oh, I gave you a full pound, all right," answered the grocer, "but I suppose they evaporated some more on your way home."

It is good storekeeping to sell only goods which you know to be reliable and to keep only such goods on your shelves.

All grocers should carry a full stock of Royal Baking Powder.

It gives the greatest satisfaction to customers and pays the grocer a greater profit, pound for pound, than any other baking powder he sells

Good Profits From Bottled Drinks

SOME IDEAS THE GROCER MIGHT CONSIDER.

So narrow are the profits on groceries becoming, dwindling as they are every year, grocers are being forced to carry side lines in greater number than ever —varieties of goods which give them a better margin for their investment and labor in selling.

There has been the tobacco department in the grocery store for years, confectionery has been sold for ever so long also, while there are numerous other specialties which are finding a place in the store every few years.

One of the lines which is meeting with much favor is aerated waters, which are being sold freely in almost every part of the country in the grocery and general stores.

In the city it is understood that such a line does not meet with as much favor on the part of the grocer as might be desired—so close is the competition of saloons and "ice cream parlors" where soft drinks are served up in style.

The Family Trade Pays.

But it is not the "over the counter" sales of soft drinks that are desired by the grocer pushing aerated waters. He is after the family trade, and he is finding this a paying proposition, more so every year as his customers increase in number.

There are such a number of really excellent soft drinks manufactured in Canada to-day that it is opportunity lost for the retailer who does not carry some stock if he is located in the country.

In most cases it is simply a matter of educating customers to the fact that these goods are obtainable in the store. It is an undoubted fact that many a household would always be supplied with a case of soft drinks, but for the fact that these must be ordered from some hotel or saloon—and what housewife is going to give the order?

The writer knows of one grocer in a town of about 1,500 who is doing a remarkable business in just one line of soft drinks. He has secured the agency for his town, and he has let his townsmen know that he has the goods. As a result he has worked up a summer trade which is rapidly growing and yielding him splendid profits. He has not sunk large sums in stock, having begun on two or three cases, which were quickly sold. To-day, during the summer months, his business in soft drinks amounts to almost as much as his whole grocery trade.

Hints on Stocking.

In stocking up it is advisable to procure such lines as are extensively advertised in your neighborhood. There must be consumer demand for these drinks if at all possible. But for a progressive grocer the lack of it need not be a hindrance to his taking up the goods.

Most of the manufacturers have any amount of cards, hangers, illustrated booklets and advertising literature which they will send gladly with the smallest orders, that their goods may be introduced. They will co-operate all they can.

Such lines as ginger ale, ginger beer, lemon sour, cream soda, birch beer, sarsaparilla are popular and sell freely while there are a number of excellent non-intoxicating beverages put up under copyrighted names.

A Window Display Will Help.

A number of these registered brands are advertised extensively and by letting the people know you have them sales are sure to result. A good plan is to run a window display once in a while, using the various colored goods for an artistic arrangement which attracts the attention of passersby. An exceedingly pretty "night" window can be secured by pyramiding the bottles on a series of shelves and placing a light behind them. This shows up the clearness of the liquids and makes the pile so attractive that few can resist the impulse to stop and examine more closely.

AN ATTRACTIVE DISPLAY OF BOTTLED DRINKS.

The illustration accompanying this article gives one an idea as to the nature of a display it is possible to make.

Caledonia waters and mineral waters are lines worth touching upon also, as are lime juices and lime juice cordials. These drinks are in demand during the summer from June to October. The earlier they are stocked up and the sooner the grocer begins to prepare for the business there is awaiting him, the greater will be his profits.

A SUCCESSFUL COLLECTION LETTER.

The collection of accounts is one of the bugbears of the grocer who does at all an extensive credit business. While a personal call is, of course, the most effective way to reach the delinquents, a letter will often do the business.

The following is a sample letter which has been adopted for this purpose with exceeding success by a Cleveland grocer. It is tactful, polite and yet striking, and its arguments are quite convincing:

Dear Sir,—Looking over our accounts we find that you owe us. It is not a pleasure for us to ask you to make settlement, but conditions of the times prompt us to press payment on all accounts. In fact, we are pressing all customers to work close to cash payments. Wholesalers are hard pressed for money, not being able to make loans from the banks to carry on their business. They have organized and are demanding close settlements from all men in business. Commission merchants ask us to pay bills every Monday, even if the goods have been bought the previous Saturday. Flour men ask us to pay previous bills before sending out a fresh lot. Wholesale grocers are a little more lenient, giving us thirty days, 2 per cent. fifteen days.

This 2 per cent. is quite an item. It means an extra profit to us. For example: If you owed us $10 for one year and we lose this 2 per cent. every fifteen days, our not being able to use this money in our business means a loss to us of about 20 cents each fifteen days, 40 cents each month or $4.80 per year.

The total of your bill and the condition of your account cost us a pretty penny in lost discounts. The saving of this percentage almost pays our operating expenses, if figured on all outstanding moneys. A quick settlement at this time would be very much appreciated.

Respectfully,

The Tobacco Trade in Canada

Despite the numerous crusades against the use of tobacco in all forms, and especially in the form of cigarettes, the consumption of this product is on the increase in nearly all the countries of the world. It would be difficult indeed to get at the reason of this and at the same time without our special province to attempt to do so. In the tobacco trade, as in all other branches of commercial life in Canada, the demand is becoming more varied every year, with a tendency for a better grade. It is not a long time ago that European manufactured tobacco was comparatively rare in the average tobacco stores of this country and to-day, even in the remote quarters of the country, may be observed a demand for Russian, Turkish or Egyptian cigarettes, and several well known British brands of smoking tobaccos are kept for sale in nearly every tobacconist's shop in Canada.

Industry Developing.

It may be thought by this that the introduction of European goods to the Canadian market may have decreased the sale of the home product, but such is not the case, however. Owing, perhaps, to the wholesale distribution of literature by the Department of Agriculture throughout the country, treating the subject of tobacco culture, this industry, which some years ago was comparatively inconspicuous, has developed into a very considerable national industry. While the farmer of days gone past was accustomed to plant only a small patch of his garden with tobacco, now in passing through certain portions of the country whole fields may be observed which are given up to its cultivation, and it may be remarked that the enormous increase in the demand for domestic tobacco has been a vast financial asset to the farmer. With the increase in skill of manufacture and the art of blending, it has found its way into many mixtures, and to-day we can purchase it in almost every form in which tobacco is offered for sale. It will be seen that the dealer to-day must keep a wide range of varieties, calling together almost from the four corners of the earth the various growths of these countries which individually possess some quality different from the other that recommend them to the consumer. In any brochure on the tobacco trade such localities as Havana or Virginia suggest themselves to us in the Western Hemisphere, and in the manufacture of cigars we know that to produce a first-class article it is necessary to bring at least a part of it from far-off Sumatra.

Cigarettes From Turkey.

The stock which enters into the cigarette comes chiefly from Turkey and Virginia. We speak of Egyptian and Russian cigarettes, but this should not imply that these countries grow the tobacco which seems to be largely an erroneous idea that is extensively entertained to-day by many. Turkey grows the tobacco, and the Egyptians, who are probably the most expert blenders in the world of cigarette tobaccos, manufacture the Turkish product into cigarettes and place it on the market under the Egyptian Government stamp. The Russians also possess some peculiarities in the art of blending which recommend their goods to the taste of some.

In very few of the commodities of life does it become necessary in the production to draw upon so many sources of supply. These conditions have led to varied results and the people to-day who use tobacco are as a rule well versed in the generalities of its production so that the dealer must exert himself to offer every inducement to his customers, and especially the grocer, who keeps it only as a part of his whole stock.

Tobacco Pays Well.

Tobacco, with a reasonable amount of attention, is a source of considerable revenue, especially in the country where it would not be profitable to carry this line alone. To obtain a successful and profitable trade in tobacco, a few of the absolutely necessary essentials to success in any sphere of business must be observed. Great care should be taken to keep the stock clean and prevent it becoming too dry. The latter difficulty in the sale of cigars and cigarettes can be overcome by the use of humidors and other apparatus which is made for the purpose. It might be stated here, however, that the successful dealer also is a keen observer of individual tastes. Some like their tobacco extremely moist, while others prefer it rather dry.

Care of Chewing.

With chewing tobaccos, which are packed in caddies, care should be exercised in taking away the individual plugs not to disturb the others, because by so doing the entire surface of the next plug may be exposed to the air and this both dries it and removes its fresh appearance.

Catering to Customers.

As a rule a man will buy his tobacco at the nearest place to which he may be for the greatest length of time, and it is only a matter of a little thought and interest in him to anticipate his peculiarities and pamper his desires. If a customer wants a certain brand of tobacco, whether it be a cigar, cigarette, or chewing tobacco, and you do not have it in stock, it very frequently pays to tell him to call again and you will have it for him then. Of course in catering to individual tastes it is a matter of judgment who you should do it for as for example it would not do to get a special brand for a customer whose trade you would have no opportunity of cultivating afterwards. It appears to be the experience of all tobacconists that men appreciate the fact that all they are required to do is to walk into a store and before they reach the counter have their favorite brand ready for them, and this becomes a far greater pleasure when they find it is not too moist or too dry, but precisely what they want. Every season brings with it its novelties in the tobacco business, with their advantages and disadvantages, and it is the successful merchant of to-day who picks his way among them, always well abreast of the times, but never indulging in their excesses.

Study Personal Tastes.

Perhaps after more than a cursory glance at the factors which constitute success in this line of business it might be wise to emphasize the feature of personal and individual tastes and the anticipation of their various shades, as this makes the customer feel that he is not going to be disappointed. It may be safe to say that men who are habitual users of tobacco prefer a bad dinner to a bad cigar, as they regard the latter as the great soother of all the disgruntling events of the day so it behooves the dealer to cater to these individual fancies and foibles and thereby incorporate in his business the salient features of success.

WILL IMPROVE CANADIAN TOBACCO.

Government Said to be Arranging Campaign for This Purpose.

The Government is said to be taking in hand a campaign for the improvement of Canadian tobacco. Two years ago a tobacco expert, Felix Charleau, was brought from France to see what were the possibilities of the Canadian tobacco. He has been conducting careful experiments with selection, raising and curing of tobacco in Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia, and is said to have found that a high grade of tobacco can be produced, and that the methods of production and curing followed in the past have been defective, thus preventing the Canadian leaf from taking the place to which it is properly entitled.

The recent changes in the excise law which place the Canadian leaf on a par with the imported leaf were made for the benefit of the grower. Now the Government is going to undertake a campaign of education for the benefit of the producer, M. Chevallier, an expert in the growing and curing of tobacco, has been secured, and will soon arrive from France to assist Mr. Charleau in the work. An English-speaking expert is to be hired for Ontario, and it is expected that next year there will be a man for British Columbia. Last summer the department leased a number of plots from tobacco producers, and had them planted with the proper sort of seed, and attended to in the most scientific way. Remarkable results were obtained, and there was an object lesson afforded the tobacco growers of the neighborhood, who could contrast the results obtained from the experimental plots with their own fields in the neighborhood.

There will be many more of these plots this year in different parts of Canada, and demonstrations and lectures on the way to cure tobacco will be continued.

MACARONI FOLLOWS IMMIGRANTS

The customs house returns in the United States show, according to a recent Canadian Trade and Commerce Report a large increase in the importation of macaroni into the country. This condition is due to the fact that the Italian who comes to America has to deny himself in a large measure of this national delicacy in his own country, but when he arrives in America the increased wages which he receives renders it possible for him to enjoy a greater indulgency in his favorite dish. In spite of the 40 per cent. duty on this product the Italian wants the best product of his own land.

As previously observed in this paper, Canadian wheat is finding its way into this product as it has been found by the Italian manufacturers that Canada produces the variety of wheat which is peculiarly adapted to the production of this article. In 1904 the value of the exports of macaroni from Naples and Castellamare to the United States alone amounted to 308,151l. This in 1905 increased to 415,848l. and in 1906 to 532,400l. The figures for 1907 are expected to amount to 600,000l.

NEW FIRM OF WINNIPEG BROKERS.

Brown, who was formerly connected with the National Cash Register Co. and more recently with the National Drug & Chemical Co., manufacturers of St. George's Baking Powder. Among other lines they have control of St. George's Baking Powder, from Winnipeg to the Pacific Coast This entire territory will be covered twice a year.

Gentlemen: Pray to accept my sincerest thanks for the kindness to forward to me so promptly the different numbers of your weeklies, viz. "The Canadian Grocer", and "The Dry Goods Review", for which I had applied through your Mr. Wm. H. Taylor.

Those publications contained just that sort of information on a certain very important subject, as the Canadian trade with foreign countries, for which I had been vainly looking in our daily newspapers. Your issues furnished excellent material and to the point too. They have been forwarded at once to the Federal Department of Trade and Commerce at Berne, Switzerland.

Yours very respectfully

English Brewed

Ale and Stout

The most healthful drink of Old England is KOPS ALE, brewed from finest Kentish hops. It is in enormous demand in all parts of the world, and our six large breweries situated in London, Birmingham, and elsewhere, are kept busy all the year round.

Kops Ale or Kops Stout will be found the best for luncheon or dinner, and are refreshing and stimulating at any time. They have a fine bitter taste, but are entirely free from anything of an injurious nature. THEY ARE ABSOLUTELY NON-INTOXICATING. Good for all the year round trade. Let us correspond with you and send you Analytical report, with other information.

A CUSTOMER PLEASED

means a friend for the grocer. It is just as true that the sale of inferior goods in the long run loses friends for the grocer. Then why take chances of losing trade by passing out cheap and inferior stove polishes when the best stove polishes may be sold by you at a good profit and help make friends for you every day.

That is a good reason for urging the sale of our very popular RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes and SUN PASTE in Tins. Every package is right when you sell it and makes friends for you and for us day in and day out. Just what you want to push. We know you think so.

Released From Prison Through a Want Ad.

By the pardon last month of John L. Silber, by Governor Haskell of Oklahoma, a strange tale of the human interest variety is brought to a conclusion, says Printers' Ink. A six-line want ad is responsible for the whole affair.

For the purpose of booming its want ad page the Oklahoman, of Oklahoma City, had offered prizes for the most original liners that appeared in the paper on a given day. A committee of local advertisers, selected to act as judges in the contest, very properly awarded the first prize to the writer of this advertisement:

WANTED—Young man in jail wants out; suggestions solicited that might result in immediate release; wants poet's address that wrote 'Stone Walls Do Not a Prison Make, Nor Iron Bars a Cage." Address John L. Silber, Kay county jail, Newkirk, Okla.

A great deal of notoriety was given to Mr. Silber's peculiar announcement, and many letters were addressed to the Oklahoman and to the prisoner from interested people all over the State, wanting to know on what charge he was confined, and whether or not anything could be done toward securing his liberty. Finally, through the assistance of the Oklahoman, the movement took definite shape, and attorneys were employed to draw up petitions for his pardon. An investigation developed the fact that Silber was very probably unjustly imprisoned.

The circumstances were briefly as follows: Silber is a young man of some twenty-two years of age a professional railroad switchman. Having an inclination to travel and being a member of the Trainmen's Union, which gave him free transportation, he left his home in Buffalo and went to Oklahoma in the spring of last year. He stopped off at Newkirk, and was looking the small town over when he was accosted by the Town Marshal, who demanded to know what he was doing there. Silber resented the Marshal's officiousness and told him it was none of his business. The latter, having nothing else to do, followed Silber about for the most of the day. Finally, Silber crossed the railroad track near the switch light. The switch light happened to be not burning. This seemed to suggest to the Marshal a plan for punishment. Silber was at once arrested on the charge of blowing out the switch light. Two of the marshal's men swore, in the preliminary hearing that they saw Silber blow out the light. Silber had a switchman's key on his person, and the case seemed likely to go rather hard with him, especially as he was without money and friends, and refused to notify his relatives in the East. On the advice of his acquaintances in Newkirk, he pleaded guilty to the charge and accepted a jail sentence rather than run the risk of being sent to the penitentiary.

Letters were written to the Governor by the prosecuting attorney who had tried the case, by the judge of the district court before whom the case was tried, and by the county sheriff, all recommending pardon. The petition was presented to the Governor by Senator Roy E. Stafford, of Oklahoma City, and pardon was almost immediately granted.

This incident, which is absolutely true, is at once a unique and forcible illustration of the immense power of a small ad. in the classified columns of a publication of good circulation. An ad. in the "Articles Wanted" column of THE CANADIAN GROCER is seen by every reader in that field who wants to buy something; "Situations Vacant" is read eagerly by those wanting employment; "Situations Wanted" by those seeking help, and so on through the whole gamut of classification.

Is there anything YOU want to Buy, Sell or Exchange? Do you want help, or do you want a situation? Are you looking for a partner? In any of these cases if you want to interest people engaged in the Grocery business the

The Pickle with the Home-made Flavor

When we say to you that we manufacture Pickles, we do not mean that we are the only firm in Canada Manufacturing Pickles, but that we are the only firm that are Manufacturing Pickles that have the Home-Made Flavor, the recipes of a woman who has spent her lifetime in perfecting them, our goods have not that Factory flavor so detrimental to all goods that endeavor to take the place of the kind that your Mother made. This is one point that we keep constantly before us, that the consumer to-day demands that the goods that they consume shall be as near as possible to the flavor that you think can be produced only in your own kitchen. This is the flavor that we manufacture, and that only.

Gentlemen: Pray to accept my sincerest thanks for the kindness to forward to me so promptly the different numbers of your weeklies, viz. "The Canadian Grocer", and "The Dry Goods Review", for which I had applied through your Mr. Wm. H. Taylor.

Those publications contained just that sort of information on a certain very important subject, as the Canadian trade with foreign countries, for which I had been vainly looking in our daily newspapers. Your issues furnished excellent material and to the point too. They have been forwarded at once to the Federal Department of Trade and Commerce at Berne, Switzerland.

Yours very respectfully

Profitable Goods

Are the goods that are a little better than the others: goods that will make sales where the others won't. Ozo Brand Pickles are good pickles, and show their quality. We have special facilities for turning out the best pickles, and we have made the most of them. For instance, we provide the seed from which the vegetables are grown and so get the best from the start; the cucumbers go straight from the vine to the factory, so that none of the fresh crispness is lost. We make our own vinegar and it cannot be beaten for pickling purposes. It will certainly pay you to specify that you want our goods when ordering pickles.

"Men Who Sell Things"

The Salesman the Ambassador of His House—The "Knocker" Really Knocking Himself—Success Lies in Being in Harmony With the House—Giving a Boost Always Pays.

By Walter D. Moody—Serial rights for Canada purchased by the MacLean Publishing Co. from the publishers, A. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

CHAPTER III.

THE KNOCKER.

The man who tears down reputations always gets most of the dirt himself.

What a jolly world of grand morals this would be if every man came up to the standard of perfection he fixes for his neighbor!

Some one has said: "There are but two kinds of young men, those that are good, and those that are no good."

This scarcely applies to salesmen, for there are many kinds in between.

To which class do you belong?

We have the Knocker, the Order-taker, the Wheelbarrow, the Sky-rocket, the Fussy or Over-anxious, the Quick-tempered, the Know-it-all, the Old-timer, and a few others with accompaniments not altogether in the nature of selling-assets.

In the whole category of men who sell things, the one whom the novice should strive to imitate is the well-rounded, strictly up-to-the-minute business-getter. Such a one is at once ambassador, pleni-potentiary, and promoter of his house.

The salesman who is worthy of his profession is not only the ambassador of his house, he is in reality the house itself, when he is out in the field. His every word and action should be clothed with a dignity suitable to the work with which he is intrusted.

In the natural course of business events, it is generally found that large institutions which employ many travelers are able to secure the services of enough really capable ones to make the general average good. If this were not so, and they were obliged to draw their entire selling-strength from the list of misfits mentioned above, they would very shortly find a padlock on the front door and the sheriff in charge.

When one government sends an ambassador to another, a man is selected for the mission who has stood high in the community, and who is endowed with peculiar ability to perform the duties. If a mistake is made, and he is found to be lacking in the necessary qualifications, such as tact, honesty, or loyalty to duty, he is promptly recalled and his place filled by another. Or, if he lacks ability only, he may wake up some fine morning to find that he has been relegated to some unimportant post in an out-of-the-way country.

But to return to salesmen. Beginning with the Knocker and taking them in order, we find them an interesting and heterogeneous group.

Knocking is Robbery.

The Knocker is the most obnoxious type, and is branded at once as the most useless. He can scarcely be rated as an asset in the selling staff, unless we take him in the inventory at a discount of ninety per cent. The remaining ten per cent. might be realized upon as a job lot, to be sold out in the first clearance sale that comes along.

The editor of the Philistine says: "Knocking is criticism, and without criticism there is no advancement."

In making that statement he certainly was not speaking of salesmen, or he would have said, "Knocking is robbery, and the thief is a parasite."

The knocking salesman should not pray, with the Pharisees, "O Lord, make other men as we are," but rather, "Let us see ourselves as others see us." If the latter prayer were granted, they would take the shortest cut possible to the nearest oculist to have their eyes fitted with long-distance, clear-seeing glasses to replace their blue goggles of doubt, hate, and suspicion.

The Knocker reminds me in some of his phases of the story of the man down in the spring branch trying to clear the water so that he could get a pure drink. He was doing all he could to filter the water, when some friend called out to him: "Stranger, come up a little higher and run that hog out of the spring, and it will clear itself."

No trouble then. The hardest work a man ever undertakes in this world is to try to lift himself up while trying to pull his brother down. It is like trying to pull yourself out of a quicksand; the more you try to work free from it, the deeper you sink. There is no such thing as boosting yourself by knocking some one else.

A Mental Introspection.

Did you ever look at yourself from head to foot—look at yourself as a salesman?

Did you ever wake up in the morning and shut your eyes and lie still and say: "Well, suppose every salesman in the house were just like me, what sort of a house would we have? Suppose every salesman in our house knocked as much as I knock, what sort of a house would we have? Suppose every salesman in the house worked as little as I work, how long before the whole thing would go into bankruptcy?"

It is well now and then to get a square, honest look at yourself.

What sort of a salesman are you?

A salesman's tongue has a great deal to do with his salesmanship; or, rather, a salesman's salesmanship has a great deal to do with his tongue.

The Knocker's tongue is full of deadly poison. It is sharp-edged and treacherous as an ever-ready stiletto.

Sit beside the victim of the Knocker. Put your ear to his heart, and you can hear a steady drip, drip, drip, as of blood from a gaping wound.

"What did that?" you say. His reply is. "An unkind tongue wounded it there."

The meanest man on earth is the one who will wound a man's character with his tongue.

The Knocker is no respecter of persons; he knocks the credit man, knocks the buyer, knocks the sales manager, knocks his fellow-travelers; in fact, he knocks everything and everybody in the place, from office boy to president. He even knocks his own interests. Every one but the Knocker himself knows that "the dog that will carry a bone will fetch a bone"; but as a temporary mischief-maker he causes "Maud," the mule of comic-newspaper fame, to appear to have creeping paralysis when compared with him as to their relative kicking merits.

Knocking is a habit, and a bad one. Don't acquire it. If you do, some day you will give yourself a knock-out blow. Remember the old saying, The man who attends to his own business has not time to attend to the business of others.

Now, recollect, if you are a salesman and love your house, everything you cannot help, everything you would have warded off if you could, everything you would have conquered if you could, everything in the salesman's life except dishonesty—and knocking is a form of dishonesty—works for good; and no power on earth can make this negative quality work for anybody's good, because dishonesty is the reversal, the throwing out of gear, of the machinery of our nature.

EXPERIENCE PROVED IT.

A general sales manager of long road experience, (Mr. James G. Sorriman, of the Metal Shingle & Siding Co., Preston), wrote an appreciative letter to the publishers of this paper, saying he used to travel for a non-advertising firm, the largest in its line, and whose name was quite similar to that of a brewery that advertised. When he named his house to his prospects, they used to ask him if it was the brewery. He says:

"I can assure you that it was very hard, up-hill work to sell goods for a firm whose name was not known to the trade. . . . Mt experience has taught me that the manufacturer who wishes to keep his goods before the trade must use the trade papers in which to make his announcement. The travelers of those who don't are at a disadvantage."

Harmony in Business.

When we begin to undermine the honest efforts of others, we reverse the machinery of our nature and run it backwards. You can no more do good work for your house when you reverse the machinery of your nature than you can make a lawn-mower cut grass when you run it backwards. One is as impossible as the other. All things work for your good when you are running in harmony with your house and in line with your house.

When you walk up to a piano and touch a key, and that key is out of tune and out of harmony, it is out of harmony not only with the rest of the keys of the piano, but with everything in the universe that is in harmony with them. But when the piano-tuner walks up to the piano and opens it, and takes out his instruments and works away at that particular string, he restores the harmony that was lost. And success lies in getting into harmony with your house. Then everything moves along harmoniously, adjusting and setting the rules of the house to music. Is it not so?

When your firm bids you do this or that, the command should immediately touch a responsive chord in your nature in sympathy with the work in hand, and then you are in harmony, which makes easy of accomplishment the most difficult task. Your house wills it, and they will do their part to make your daily efforts conduce to your final success.

When you are tempted to believe that your house is going straight to perdition, and that you are the only man on the premises who can save it, think of the incident that occurred in 1864 in the administration of Abraham Lincoln as President of the United States. The political aspect of the whole country was that of a seething, boiling Niagara. Some gentlemen from the West were excited about the commissions or omissions of the Administration. President Lincoln heard them patiently, and then replied: "Gentlemen, suppose all the property you were worth was in gold, and you had put it in the hands of Blondin to carry across the Niagara River on a rope; would you shake the cable or keep shouting out to him, 'Blondin, stand up a little straighter!' 'Blondin, stoop a little more!' 'Go a little faster!' 'Lean a little more to the south!' 'Blondin, lean a little more to the north'? No; you would hold your breath, as well as your tongue, and keep your hand off until he was safe over. The Government is carrying an immense weight. Untold treasures are in our hands. Keep silence, and we'll get you safe across."

Knocking or "kicking" salesmen classify themselves as among the reform forces.

Inasmuch as their object seems to be the immediate reformation of the entire business world, they are hopelessly beyond argument, and therefore the best course for a sensible salesman to pursue with regard to them is to leave them alone, and let them kick. They don't suggest any remedies, but they just kick, and there are always a few of the weaker sort standing around to give them encouragement and assistance.

To reform the whole earth and make it over different is a job that only the saints can tackle.

Speaker Cannon, of the House of Representatives, paid more attention during the political campaign in 1906 to the reform forces than to any other faction.

Let Kickers Alone.

"We have had ten years," said he, "of uninterrupted prosperity under the management of the Republican party, but in spite of this there are here and there among our eighty-five millions of people kickers whose vanity leads them to believe they could manage things much better if they had the chance. . . . We used to have a mule, and when we used to put him in the log barn and give him a full feed of oats, as soon as he had eaten the oats he'd begin to kick and bray. We never could figure out whether he was braying because he was kicking, or kicking because he was braying. But all we did was to keep out of the barn and let him kick and bray all he wanted to."

That's all you can do with the kickers—let them alone. They are beyond reasoning with.

Your house has enough to take up all its attention with things that are happening every day, without bothering about things that can't be mended or with things that are going to happen some time in the future, except, perhaps, to ask your resignation if you can't break the habit of knocking.

What you have to do is to take care of the things that are within the sphere of your duty, and you will have no time to bother about things that do not concern you. That's what your house is doing, and what the men are doing who head the sales list in your house.

The Knocker is bad enough, but his friends who stand around in foolish little cliques encouraging him are no better. He at least has the courage of his convictions, such as they are, while those others stay around in the dark and act as cat's paw to pull his chestnuts out of the fire.

The Knocker is of the least account in the entire group of negative salesmen. The others try to amount to something in their own way, but he has been mean ever since he was born.

In reviewing them all, I want you to understand—if you are a Knocker—that you are worse than a hundred of the poorest salesmen put together.

The most stupid Knocker of the entire kicking class is the one who seems to take peculiar delight in running down his competitors.

The Good Word for Rivals.

There is no surer help to the efforts of a salesman than that which comes through speaking well of his rivals in business whenever opportunity presents itself, and that not merely in the sense implied by the witty preacher who said, while seeking a goodly collection from a large audience, "In order to get a good collection nowadays an audience must be assured beyond a reasonable doubt that it will get back two dollars for every one put in the box." Kindness for kindness' sake alone is its own reward.

When I was about to make my first trip on the road, my employer came to me and said: "I hope you can sell Mr. —— at ——. If you succeed in getting a bill there, we will give you a long credit mark. As yet no man calling from our house has been able to interest him."

On my arrival there, I was given a cold reception. Quite naturally, I was anxious to land an order, as can well be imagined; but, like the rest, I failed, and was greatly crestfallen over my defeat.

I kept on drumming that customer, determined that I would get him sooner or later. About the time of my fourth visit he surprised me by saying: "I need some goods to-day. If you have what I want, you'll get a good order."

When he had finished looking through my sample line, he turned to me with, "Do you know why I am giving you a trial?"

I told him I supposed it was because I had happened along when he was out of goods.

"Well," said he, "that is only part of the reason. The first time you called at my place you asked me what house I traded with mostly, and you spoke so highly of them that I made up my mind you would give me a square deal if you had a chance."

I sold that man goods until he retired from business, ten years later, and he was one of the best friends I had.

President Roosevelt, in his last message to Congress, said: "Science in business is advanced as never before. No one of us can make the world move on very far, but it moves at all only when each one of a very large number does his duty. Our duty is not in doing what we think is best, or what is best for ourselves, but in doing what is best for the common good of all."

There are people who believe that criticism and fault-finding are indicative of wisdom, and that the man who performs his daily task quietly and without murmur is lacking in the substantial qualities of mind. To be disparaged is the penalty Brilliance must ever pay to Dullness.

A psychologist tells us: "In each human being there are four personalities, namely; first, John as he is known to himself; second, John as he is known to his friends; third, John as he is known to his enemies; fourth, the real John, who is known only to his Maker, and on whom every deed of the other Johns leaves its impress for good or evil. Those who love us see us at our best, and only by striving the soul grows stronger."

Harmony as a Business Lubricant.

However perfect a piece of mechanism may be, it must be kept well oiled, in order that it may perform its functions properly. In the same manner the house and its salesmen must fit together and work harmoniously; yet none the less there will occasionally be found external and internal causes which create friction or clog the wheels.

The "petty dust" of daily business life is more than apt to upset the mental machinery, and the best lubricant is to be found in tact combined with humor. A kind word or thoughtful silence, which sometimes is better than speech, a boost in place of a knock, each has its place in keeping the wheels of commerce running smoothly along the roadway of business life. So that, after all, the conclusion of the whole matter may be found in the old rule, "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you."

Boost, brother, boost! Don't knock.

"What a mighty power there is that regulation of an establishment secured by cheerful willingness among all concerned to carry out the laws; a willingness that makes every member of the organization an agent in the interests of its common good!"

"In the mud and scum of things, Something always, always sings."

"Drop an unkind word, or careless—in a minute it is gone,
And there's half a hundred ripples circling on, and on, and on;
They keep spreading, spreading, spreading from the centre as they go,
And there ain't no way to stop them, once you've started them to flow.
Drop an unkind word, or careless—in a minute you forget,
But there's little waves a-flowing, and there's ripples circling yet;
And perhaps in some sad heart a mighty wave of tears you've stirred,
And disturbed a life that's happy, when you dropped that unkind word."

Life Story of One of Western Ontario's Prominent Grocers.

Engaging in the grocery business in an unpretentious manner twenty-five years ago at the corner of Thames and Victoria Streets, Mr. H. D. McCarty is to-day one of Ingersoll's most successful and widely-known business men Tact and perseverance in catering to and studying the people's wants have found their reward. From a small beginning, when the great bulk of the work devolved upon himself, Mr. McCarty's business has steadily grown until it is now recognized as one of the largest in the town. Although there was probably little at that time to give promise of its present day importance, Mr. McCarty was peculiarly fortunate in selecting his stand. From time to time large industries have sprung up in close proximity to his store until at the present time he is practically surrounded by them. These have been a means of largely increasing his patronage as it is necessary for a large percentage of the employes to pass his store in going to and from their work. Himself a loyal and enterprising citizen, Mr. McCarty has kept pace with the progress of the town. His grocery store —always well stocked—is commodious and modern. In addition to the grocery store Mr. McCarty conducts a first-class butcher shop in connection, and a large bakery and confectionery business on the opposite corner.

Although his own affairs have made heavy demands upon his time, Mr. McCarty has demonstrated his worth as a citizen by devoting considerable attento the fulfillment of public duties. He has served for six years on the council, being one of the first aldermen when the change was made from the ward system to representation by population. He also has manifested a keen interest in the educational affairs of the town. For the past three years he has been a member of the Board of Education and last year was chairman.

Mr. McCarty is a son of N. C. McCarty, who has conducted a general store at Thamesford, five miles north of here for fifty years.

THE PERCENTAGE OF PROFIT.

A discussion on the methods of figuring the margin of profit has recently been going on in some American papers One writer, in asking the question: "What per cent. profit would I make if I bought an article for $10 and sold it for $20?" was given the answer. "One hundred per cent."

Answers of this kind are given in most arithmetics used in public schools, but no more misleading answer could be given, as it leads the prospective business man to think of the percentage of profit in an entirely false manner. As a matter of fact, the profit on the above transaction was only 50 per cent.

Another writer asks the question: "If a man buys a horse for $50 and sells him for $75, what percentage of profit does he make?" Answer: "50 per cent."

Suppose a man contemplated the sale of a horse on the basis of the above transaction. A broker approaches him and offers to conduct the negotiation on the basis of a commission of 33 1-3 per cent. Now, the owner of the horse, having a profit of 50 per cent. in sight, agrees to this, and the broker, having completed the transaction, renders a bill as follows:

Sold, one horse, at	$75
Commission, 33 1-3 per cent	25
Due seller	$50

The seller's books would show a profit of 50 per cent., entirely eaten up by the commission of 33 1-3 per cent. Not good figuring, is it? Yet this is the way some small merchants figure, which fact doubtless accounts for them remaining small.

The following table will be found valuable where merchants wish to figure on a certain percentage of profits:

To make 16 2-3 per cent. profit add 20 per cent. to the cost.

To make 20 per cent. profit add 25 per cent. to the cost.

To make 25 per cent. profit add 33 1-3 per cent. to the cost.

To make 33 1-3 per cent. profit add 50 per cent. to the cost.

To make 50 per cent. profit add 100 per cent. to the cost.

The only way a merchant can make 100 per cent. is to get something for nothing and sell it for something—The Storekeeper.

What the Canadian Trade is Doing

Letters From Our Corps of Grocer Correspondents From Coast to Coast—Interesting Happenings of the Week in the Various Towns and Cities—Discussion of Trade Problems.

INGERSOLL.

May 25.—There is a fairly plentiful supply of home grown potatoes in the district yet. More than the usual supply was offered for sale on the market on Saturday, the quality being remarkably good. Owing to the protracted spell of wet weather but few potatoes have been planted and the demand for seed varieties has been comparatively slow. The ruling price is $1 a bag.

The Grocer recently called attention to the importance of courtesy on the part of merchants towards traveling salesmen. A very argumentative course was followed as to the influence of a commercial traveler who feels disposed to speak a good word for the merchant who by his genialty and courtesy has stamped him in the eyes of the traveling fraternity as a "good fellow." If this state of affairs is important in relation to the commercial men, of how much greater importance must it be with the patrons of a merchant? Does this not emphasize the necessity of every merchant establishing the greatest possible friendliness between himself and his customers? There is no need for unnecessary attention, which to many is decidedly distasteful, but a never-wear-out-pleasantness, and a uniform disposition to please are certainly essentials that must be reckoned in the business getting methods of the present age. Cold, formal business methods are not the kind to popularize a merchant. A smile, a vein of humor, and attentiveness to all will invariably win success. Broken promises also are another matter worthy of consideration by all merchants. A broken promise always means disappointment and there is probably nothing so disastrous to mercantile life as dissatisfied customers. If a merchant promises to deliver an article at a specified time he should be reasonably certain at the time that the promise will be fulfilled. If he fails to do as he agreed, and especially if this happens frequently, he is weakening the confidence which his customers have in him. Again, if a merchant recommends an article, giving his personal guarantee, as is so common nowadays, he should know whereof he speaks. Merchants like everyone else, are not infallible, but when they do make mistakes, they often find that human nature is very unforgiving. They should therefore guard against them in every way.

CHATHAM.

May 25.—Chatham is to have a Dominion Day celebration this year. The subject was brought up at a meeting of the Board of Trade last week, and was taken hold of with alacrity. Since then there has been a well-attended meeting of the committee appointed to look after the celebration, the various branches of the work have been organized, and several hundred dollars subscribed. This will be practically the first celebration of any importance since 1895. The move taken this year should be a source of gratification to Wm. Anderson, the grocer, president of the local retail merchants, who has always been one of the warmest advocates of such a celebration. Among the grocers on the committees are John McCorvie, Wm. Potter and H. W. Jacques.

On Tuesday, May 19, John A. Hoon completed his 52nd year in the ginger beer business in this city. He is one of Chatham's oldest merchants.

Cardboard meat boxes—or cartons—have made their appearance here. Both W. J. Easton and Mounteer Bros. are using them. The boxes come in flat shape and are folded here, being chiefly used for steaks, chops, etc. They are printed with the dealer's name.

The tobacco situation in this vicinity may be gauged by the report from Blenheim that a buyer who visited there last week was welcomed with open arms when he offered prices ranging from 4 to 6 cents per pound for last year's product.

After staying up pretty nearly all winter at 28c and 30c per pound, butter last Saturday dropped suddenly to 20c. The increase of butter prices in this vicinity in recent years is invariably a matter of comment among housekeepers. There has been, however, a corresponding increase in quality. Poor butter is nowhere so prevalent as it was 15 years ago. The increase in price and also in quality is largely due to the coming up of the Maple City and other creameries, which simultaneously offered a market for cream and created a demand for high class butter, and to the growing use of separators among the farmers who still make their own butter.

Extensive alterations and improvements to the front of Northwood & Bartlett's King Edward grocery, on Thames Street, were commenced last week.

One of the handsomest window displays seen for some time was the meat window put on by Wm. Anderson last week. The display consisted of ham, spiced rolls, smoked meats, etc., garnished with appropriate sauces, the whole being tastefully and attractively arranged.

EDMONTON.

May 23.—The weather this spring has been ideal for seeding in this part of the west and as a result the grain is practically all sown. The fine, sunny weather which has won for this province the name of "Sunny Alberta," continued last week and now warm showers are falling every few days which is causing the grain to grow rapidly. The prospects of a good grain crop has caused trade everywhere to pick up and no trace may be seen now of the financial depression that affected the country during the winter unless, indeed, it is at the banks, which are a little more chary of loaning money. To help in remedying these conditions, Secretary Harrison, of the Edmonton Board of Trade, has written to all the local managers of the banks here setting out the conditions of crops in the Edmonton district. He points out that about 85 per cent. of the seeding is done and there is an increase of acreage from 15 to 25 per cent. over last year.

Grocers in Edmonton report a very brisk trade during the past month. The retail trade has been increased on account of the large influx of people to the city this spring. Wholesalers are also doing an unusually large business. Besides supplying the demands of the retailers in Edmonton and the towns in the surrounding district, they are also selling large quantities of groceries to survey and prospecting parties. Railroad contractors at work grading the G.T.P. west of Edmonton to the Macleod River are also buying large quantities of provisions for their men. Most of these contractors are from Omaha, Nebraska, and they state that provisions in Edmonton do not cost much more than in the States where they have been working.

On Wednesday, May 20th, the Canadian Northern made a substantial reduction in the freight rates from Minnesota and Wisconsin to Edmonton. This reduction amounts to from 4 to 8 cents per 100 pounds, according to the class. The following are the old and new rates per 100 pounds in the different classes, showing the reduction:

Old rate	$2.55	$2.13	$1.71
New rate	2.47	2.07	1.65
Reduction	08	.06	.06
Classes.	4	5	6
Old rate	$1.28	$1.15	$1.00
New rate	1.24	1.11	.94
Reduction	.04	.04	.06

Classes.	7	8	10
Old rate	$0.71	$0.62	$0.58
New rate	.67	.62	.55
Reduction	.05	.00	.03

This new rate applies on the same classes governed by the Canadian classification. The rates apply not only locally from St. Paul, Minneapolis, Minnesota Transfer, Duluth and Colquet. Minnesota and Superior, Wisconsin, but also as proportional rates on practically all traffic coming from points in the United States, east, west and south of St. Paul.

HAMILTON.

May 26.—This city is the hub of a mighty nice section of country. On Saturday the new trolley line to Brantford was opened and Hamilton merchants are now in close touch with one of the richest farming communities in Ontario. Merchants all over should use their efforts for bringing the country people over these electric railways. They come oftener, their expenses are less, they are now cheerful and buy more freely than under the old conditions.

A good many grocers are not just delighted with the Wednesday half-holiday now being advocated for the summer months. In speaking to one of the up-town large stores, one of the firm made the assertion that it was entirely a misconception that business was benefited through the clerks getting the half-day off. Instead of their making good on the kindness of their employers in giving them this pleasure, they rather use it as a hold-up, or a matter of course. The day after instead of starting in with a will to make up for the loss of the half-day's business they come in in a listless manner, do their work in a slipshod way and compare notes, with tedious consultations, of their different enjoyments of the day previous. This particular grocer says he always dreads the day after.

I think it is up to the employes, if they want this holiday, to show some appreciation of the kindness shown them. By the way, do grocers in Ontario think that the average clerk is improving? Do they think a course of technical education a good idea? Hamilton is not isolated on this question. Can the clerks improve their position? Will they try?

LONDON.

May 26.—The feature in the wholesale trade the past week was a drop of ten cents in the price of sugar. Some dealers look for a further decline in price. All other staples remain firm.

In retail circles trade was very fair the past week. Farmers' produce is coming in freely, and the crop outlook was never better. A further decline in butter brings the price down to the lowest point in some years, namely, 20 cents per pound.

Thos. Shaw, President; E. J. Ryan, Treasurer, and E. E. Linnell, a member of the Retail Grocers' Association, visited Detroit on Monday, and completed arrangements for the excursion to that city on June 17th. They were courteously received by the management of the baseball association and the various parks, and the indications are that the outing will be one of the most enjoyable yet held.

Almost every grocer in the city has a card in his window announcing the Wednesday half-holiday during June, July and August.

Frank H. Robinson, of South London, an ex-President of the Retail Grocers' Association, has disposed of his business to Arthur Mitchell, for some time with A. McCormick & Son.

H. J. Glanville, a member of the Retail Grocers' Association Executive, has sold his business to his son. Owing to the ill-health of his wife, Mr. Glanville has decided to move to Western Canada.

MONTREAL.

May 26.—The anticipated falling off in business is beginning to be felt in the grocery trade, due largely to the commencing exodus of people to the country. A few hot days are sufficient to crystallize any intentions in this direction, as the country appears as such a happy change from the heat of the city. As long as weather conditions are favorable people are apt to linger in the city, but this desire immediately vanishes as soon as a few hot days put in their appearance.

One grocer puts the falling off in his trade at 25 per cent. during the summer season, while others place it as high as 40 per cent., and some as low as 20 per cent. Of course, the fluctuation depends in a large measure on the locality. If the patronage of a grocer consists chiefly of that class who cannot afford to get away to the country for any length of time, then he does not feel it so much as his unfortunate brother who depends upon a more fashionable trade. The latter class is obliged to go to the country, whether they want to or not, as a matter of form. Trade receives some stimulation while the wants of those going away are being satisfied, and, naturally, dealers are pushing forward the stock which is suited to this character of trade.

The grocery department of W. H. Scroggie presents a particularly pleasing aspect with its specially constructed booths. Mention might be made of a booth in which is being displayed a fine exhibition of Wagstaffe's jams. Another specially pleasing display, also in a pretty booth, is Nestle's chocolate. These exhibitions and demonstrations add very much to the appearance of a store and aid sales.

There seems to be among the trade a very general activity in canned vegetable and canned fruits, which is due to the fact that while the weather is favorable to this branch of the trade the prices of the fresh article are somewhat prohibitive.

In last week's correspondence some mention was made of an orange drive, which Fraser, Viger & Co. ran off with great success. It was intimated that something else of a novel character would soon take place in this store, and now the secret is out. From oranges to pine apples is not a far cry, and at the present a very general distribution of pineapples is taking place. In their case, the extensive buying of a product, when it may be purchased at an advantageous price which will cover sufficiently the extra risk involved in buying, has proven highly satisfactory.

Kingsley Harrison is making a display of brooms in his windows which certainly goes to show that even as inartistic a commodity as this may be arranged so that the general effect is highly pleasing.

John Robertson & Son, St. Catherine Street, are still displaying a good arrangement of G. H. Mumm's champagnes. This firm has always placed considerable faith in the utility of window displays as a business producer.

A rather unique example of window dressing may be seen at J. B. Bertheaume's store, corner Park Avenue and Prince Arthur Street. It consists of an arrangement of liquor bottles which are decidedly flat, and nicely balanced. On the top of each is a jug, the front of which is a reproduction of a jolly old chap's face.

After considerable contact with the grocers in the city it is safe to say that trade, taken altogether, is rather good, although many retailers were somewhat pessimistic a few weeks ago. An apt application of the ancient adage about it being an ill wind that blew nobody any good was suggested by a dealer when he remarked that the recent depredations of the stock market might render it necessary for many to remain in the city who might otherwise be away for four or five months.

GALT.

May 26.—"Picking up" is the unanimous verdict of the grocers of Galt, when asked concerning the condition of trade. Business the past week was exceptionally good, and a continuance of the same condition of affairs is promised for the present week.

The price of butter has dropped three cents per pound during the last week. Plenty of pasture and more butter is the cause. The grocers were selling butter on Friday of last week at the above-mentioned figure, but on Saturday at the market the farmers started out at the same old 28 cents. It was not long, however, before they realized that conditions had changed since their last visit to the market, and the price came down with a rush. There was a good attendance at the market, and with the exception of butter, the prices were unchanged.

The grocers had a holiday on Monday. A large number of the clerks took advantage of the opportunity and went to Toronto for Sunday and Monday.

Some of them attended the races, but to date, your correspondent has not been informed of any big killings.

"The Hawkers' and Pedlars' by-law as passed by the town council is valid under the statutes of the province, and parties operating under its provisions must govern themselves accordingly." The above is the substance of a decision handed out by Magistrate Blake this morning in the case of a local man, who has been canvassing for orders for tea, coffee and prunes.

The accused argued that he was not liable by reason of the fact that he purchased a supply of goods, kept them at his house, and then canvassed for orders.

He was unable to show that he was paying taxes as a tea merchant, and was accordingly given the option of being fined and given an opportunity to fight the by-law; to pay a peddlars' license of $10, or to quit peddling. He refused to pay the license, and said that he would give up the tea business.

A number of retail merchants were present to watch the working of the by-law, and were well pleased with the fact that the measure was valid.

The Galt Retail Merchants held a very successful meeting in the council chamber on Friday evening. It was decided that the merchants in town should close their stores on the afternoon of the second day of the horse show, Friday, June 19. In previous years there has never been a definite understanding as to the day on which the half-holiday would be declared, but this year the action of the retail merchants will have the effect of making the holiday unanimous.

After a thorough discussion the members of the association decided that there should be no half-holiday during the summer. The action was taken because of the unsatisfactory results attending the inauguration of the weekly half-holiday in other towns. The Galt merchants have also had several unsatisfactory experiences with the half-holiday, and for this reason it was decided that no action should be taken this year.

As an evidence of their interest in the work of the Agricultural Society the association has decided to donate a silver cup, valued at $75, for competition among the townships at the annual fall fair. The township securing the greatest number of prizes at the annual exhibition will hold the cup for the succeeding year. The donation of the cup, which will be held in trust by the Agricultural Society, will undoubtedly have the effect of greatly stimulating interest among the farmers of the different townships in the county.

The association appointed A. Jopson as official collector. He will be entrusted with the collection of all debts, many of which are several years old. He has the authority of the association and has already made good progress in this line.

Committees were appointed to make arrangements for the reception and entertainment of the delegates to the annual convention of the Dominion Retail Merchants' Association, which will be held in Galt in July.

VANCOUVER.

May 23.—Tomatoes from Victoria are on the Vancouver market this week, but at a much higher price than the Floridas, retailing at 20 cents. Cucumbers also from glass growers on the Island, bring 15 cents retail. California onions will be to hand in a day or so and will reduce the price from 4½ to about 3 cents. The Australian article has been the centre of the market for some time. Bermudas sell for 10 cents. Strawberries are still high in price, and will likely remain so until the Hood Rivers come in. These arrive in both fine quality and large quantity, and hold the market until supplanted by the local. With this succession, the Coast cities have a long supply.

John Sinnelt, a wholesale fruit merchant, of Macclesfield, England, who has been in the Province with an eye to business, believes that the fruit trade between British Columbia and the Old Country will see great development. Apples from here have a ready market at high prices, but the quantity is not very large as yet. Mr. Sinnelt states that the more wealthy classes in the Old Country prefer very large, highly-colored apples. Appearances seem to count more than flavor, as is shown by the fact that the Yellow Newtown Pippins, of Oregon, being larger and brighter, though inferior in flavor to those of New York, bring a much higher price. Fruit brought from a long distance is more prized than that grown in Great Britain. Much as fruit experts have spoken against the Ben Davis, Mr. Sinnelt says it is one of the most profitable apples. The fruit arrives in England in just as good condition as when packed. It finds a ready market, and the lower price is more than counteracted by the fact that there are no spoiled apples.

Dickie & Fraser, a grocery firm of Mount Pleasant, have dissolved partnership. Mr. Dickie will continue the business.

Another Western change is the purchase of the Calgary branch of the Perrin Biscuit Company by S. G. Adams, late of the Alberta Locators. Mr. Adams was on the road for the Perrin Company for five years and understands the business thoroughly. The business will be greatly extended.

A NEW BUTTER HOUSE.

R. E. Lunham and R. E. Graham are doing business at 592 St. Paul St., Montreal, under the style of Lunham & Graham, carrying on a butter trade which, even at this early date, is of considerable magnitude. Both gentlemen are young men, being known to most grocery and provision men in Montreal, eastern and central Canada. Mr. Lunham was formerly a traveler for the Montreal Packing Company, while Mr. Graham was in the sales department of the same company. They are making a specialty of butter, which they are putting out under their own brand, Corona, and as both are hustlers they ought to make themselves felt.

NEW METHODS OF PRESERVING.

Water Extracted by Mechanical Means Leaving Fruit in Pure State.

A new system for the concentration of fresh vegetables and for preserving them for an indefinite time has been adopted by a company of experienced canners recently formed in the United States. By the new process, which is called dehydrating, the water is extracted from the fresh vegetables by means of a mechanical process and without the use of any chemicals whatever, so that the absolute purity of the goods is guaranteed. There being about 90 per-cent. of water in most vegetables, the water is extracted, leaving only the volatile oils and nutritious elements, as well as the original color and flavor, so that when the dehydrated vegetables are cooked in the same manner as fresh vegetables the volume, consistency and flavor are restored, thus offering great advantages during the seasons when it is difficult and expensive to procure fresh vegetables. The United States Navy Department recently tested the new process satisfactorily and have placed a large order for these goods to be supplied the fleet now in Pacific waters.

GENERAL P.O. DELIVERY AIDED.

The general delivery windows in the general post office building in New York are now open during the entire 24 hours, including Sundays and holidays. The windows heretofore have been closed at midnight on week-days, and at 6 p.m. on Sundays and holidays. These additional facilities will be a convenience to foreigners, transient callers and residents of other cities visiting New York.

PERSONAL NOTES.

A. H. Brittain, Montreal, was in Toronto the early part of this week.

Wilfrid C. Cronk, of the Lakeside Canning Co., Lakeside, Ont., was in Toronto this week on a business trip.

Joseph Symington, of The Symington Co., Brandon, Man., was in Toronto last week on his return from a trip to his old home in Ireland. Mr. Symington is one of the early and first settlers of Brandon and as one of his old business friends expressed it, "He was waiting at the station when the first train came in." Mr. Symington made a great success in business and although not taking an active interest in trade is always close to what is what in Brandon business.

C. R. Cousins, grain merchant, St. Johns, Que., is dead after an illness of a week's duration. His death occurred at an early hour Tuesday, May 19. Mr. Cousins, who was 56 years of age, was a popular citizen of St. Johns, having been elected Mayor of the town by acclamation at one time and also during his career having been urged to accept nomination for the House of Commons, which he refused.

TRADE RETURNS OF THE WORLD.

The Department of Trade and Commerce has made still another valuable innovation to the work done in that department by adding the Trade Statistics of the World. It is now being furnished regularly by the British and foreign countries with their trade and statistic returns, thus enabling those desiring any special trade information to obtain it on application to that department.

SHOULD ASSURE TRAVELERS' SAFETY.

The terrible catastrophe at Tillsonburg last week, when several lives were lost through the burning of the Queen's hotel, has brought very strongly to the front among the travelers the question of the very inefficient fire protection and the lack of provision for means of escape in hotels all over Canada. It seems that in a good many cases a tragedy is necessary to draw attention to a dangerous and unlawful state of affairs. There are many other hotels in different parts of Canada which are just as dangerous in case of fire and just as inefficiently equipped as the hotel in Tillsonburg, and it is hoped that the catastrophe in this instance may prove a lesson to other houses similarly situated.

Just how horribly inefficient are the provisions made for such emergencies is soon learned from conversation with a few travelers. One man, who carries a grip in the interests of a Toronto house and has spent several years along the north shore of the lakes, said that only two hotels in that territory made any pretence of providing fire escapes. Another, who covers western Ontario, says that in the larger towns some attempt is made to provide for emergencies, but in the smaller hotels in the smaller towns and villages, as a general rule, there is no sign of any safety appliances whatever. Eastern Ontario is somewhat older from point of population and should present better conditions, but as a general rule the facts just stated will apply pretty well all over the province, and not only in Ontario, but also in the other provinces. In the west, where most of the hotels are comparatively new, when the building has been put up with any idea of permanence, the matter of provision for escape in case of fire seems to be fairly well looked after, but in hundreds of towns there are hotels wholly unprotected and where a fire might easily be attended by such dire results as those in Tillsonburg.

The law provides for a certain standard of equipment for public houses. Why is not this enforced? And again, even where the required equipment of this nature is provided, this provision seems so woefully inadequate as to be almost ridiculous. The trouble is that the matter is never very seriously thought of until the need occurs.

One fire escape on a hotel may be of great service, and again, may be of little use, as the inmates, as occurred in the Tillsonburg affair, may be cut off from access to it. At least the front and rear, or the two sides of the hotel, should be fitted with fire escapes and means should be provided so that the guests may know where these are situated.

Hundreds of hotels, particularly in the smaller towns, have only one stairway, and that often so narrow that two persons can scarcely mount abreast. This is another source of danger. A fire starting in a building of this kind anywhere near the stairway would give the inmates practically no chance to reach the ground in the regular way. In some cases, too, in the city hotels where elevators are used, the stairways are so crooked and inconvenient that in a fire they would be very confusing.

A good many of the travelers think that if a nightwatchman were provided in all the smaller hotels they would be able to sleep with an easier mind and that there would be little danger of the recurrence of a tragedy such as the one at Tillsonburg. It seems in that case, that everyone in the hotel was asleep and the fire must have been going for considerable time before it was discovered. No doubt, a watchman, if a reliable man was provided, would obviate any such danger as this.

If nothing better, the simple system which is noticed occasionally, of a coil of substantial rope fastened to a hook near the window in each room would be a comparatively inexpensive and at the same time a mighty comforting equipment. Most travelers are able-bodied and cool enough to get out of any house without much difficulty if such an appliance were provided.

Travelers in the grocery trade are particularly interested in this matter from the fact that they are on the road, spending their nights in these more or less dangerous hotels, all the year. Other trades have their particular seasons which keep the men out for a few months at a time, but the grocery traveler goes from New Year's till Christmas and covers his field a good deal oftener than the other men. These men suffer enough from the incidents of putting up with the discomforts of the average hotel without worrying as to their safety while asleep, and the general feeling is that some strong action for improving existing conditions as regards this matter should be taken immediately.

A DROP IN SUGAR.

The decline of 10 cents in refined sugars in Canadian markets, which was announced at the end of last week, came as rather a surprise. The general situation had been weakening slightly for some days, but it was thought that with the scarcity of raw sugar which prevails this year and with the approach of the summer season of large demand, the values would be maintained.

The European market declined last week to 11s. 1½d. for raw beet sugars, and the American markets were also easier, some say as a result of better reports than have been expected from Cuba, while others attribute it to manipulation among United States refiners.

The decline can scarcely be regarded as anything but temporary. The total visible supply of Europe and America is given at 2,789,779 tons, as against 3,206,451 tons at same date last year, and total stocks and afloats together show a decrease of 350,672 tons, on last year's reports at same date.

Taking everything into consideration, with the active demand the fruit season will produce, it seems almost assured that a return will be made shortly to prices recently ruling, and there is some probability of an advance on them.

THE SITUATION IN THE WEST

Splendid Prospects for Bumper Crops—Wheat Markets Firm—Cattle Trade Booming—American Immigration Pouring in.

The Western Viewpoint, by our Special Winnipeg Correspondent.

There is no question that at the present time the crop occupies the centre of the stage so far as Western Canada is concerned. The week that has just closed brought with it Foster's projected cold wave rain, a little snow and a little frost, but none of these things were bad for the western crop, no matter what some of the pessimists may think or say to the contrary. The entire wheat crop has been seeded for nearly ten days; it is all up, the height varying according to the district from three to six inches. It is an especially well-stooled crop, the plants strong and vigorous and of a lush dark green. There has been plenty of moisture but not too much. The oat crop will be finished by Tuesday night at the latest and fully seventy-five per cent, of it is above ground. Barley and flax are being sown now and also oats that are intended for green feed only.

There is no gainsaying the fact that the crop of 1908 has gone into the ground under the most favorable conditions that have prevailed in the west for many years. It has got a splendid start and though it may have many setbacks before it is matured it will be hard crop to kill because it is deep rooted in good soil, the bulk of the seed was of excellent quality and it has a month's start of last year. Even the little nip of frost of the past week is regarded as a blessing rather than a disadvantage because the wheat that was seared at the top has still plenty of time to grow and a little touch of frost is always inclined to make it root deeper and stool better.

With the crop outlook so exceptionally favorable the Winnipeg wheat market has held remarkably firm. There was a drop from higher levels in the early part of the week that brought prices more in line with export and quite an active trade was the result, though this slackened again on Saturday. The British miller is nobly living up to the prediction made in these columns some weeks ago and that was that with Canadian western wheat at the prices it has held at for months he would take just as little as he could get along with but that he would have to have some. Every little while, if the market drops a point or two there are bids for export and as soon as it goes up again as it does very quickly on anything like active bidding, the British miller gets both coy and shy and waits for the next break.

The stocks of low-grade wheat in interior elevators are all cleaned up and the stocks of contract grades are very small indeed. At present, of course, nothing is coming, farmers are too busy, but in another couple of weeks there will probably be a little run of contract wheat to the elevators, but dealers generally regard the wheat crop of 1907 as pretty much a thing of the past.

The cattle trade continues to boom, the receipts at the C.P.R. yards being the largest for this month. The high prices attracted some foolish people who sent in some very rank tail-enders for Tuesday market, but as they got only 2½ cents, while anything like good stuff brought all the way from 4½ to 5¼ cents perhaps they will not repeat the experiment. The hog shipments were large but were not up to the standard of the previous week. One very noticeable feature of the stock shipments is the increased number of cattle coming from stock farms and not from ranges. On Tuesday, with 107 cars of cattle in the yard, only five cars were off ranges, all the others being fed cattle and nearly all from the Province of Manitoba or the extreme eastern and southern parts of Saskatchewan. This shows the trend of the trade and is most encouraging, for the more the farmer attempts the finishing of cattle and the better prices he thus obtains, the easier it will be to get others to go into it.

An important meeting of the week in connection with the cattle trade was the annual gathering of the Buyers' and Shippers' Association, at which there was lively discussion on many points. Though it is a meeting from whch the press are always rgidly excluded, the secretary, Glen Campbell, M.P.P., handed out a report that showed that one of the matters that was given grave consideration was the plan of weighing cattle immediately off the cars instead of waiting, as they do in every other stockyard, until they have been fed and watered and have had some hours of rest. The association passed a strong resolution declaring their determination to refuse to sell in this manner in the future. It is more than likely that, encouraged by this example shippers outside this association will refuse to sell off cars also.

The matter of city stock yards and public abattoir was discussed and approved. There is also a clamor for increased accommodation at the present stockyards. The C.P.R. have always been chary of increasing the yards owing to the idea that when the range business decreased less space would be needed, but with the tremendous shipments of local stuff coming forward this spring it is evident that no matter what may be needed for the range cattle increased accommodation is now needed for the local stuff.

The executive of the Western Grain Growers' Association have held another meeting at Regina in connection with the demand of the association for government ownership of interior elevators. It is not yet known what action the governments will take but it has leaked out that the association are by no means a unit on what they are asking for and that as a matter of fact some of their prominent members, who are also members of the Saskatchewan Legislature are much more eager for the railways to build special binning elevators at large points than they are for the actually government-owned system.

The question is often asked this year, "Well, how about American immigration?" Well, it is pouring in. After all the talk of hard times there was less shortage in the Canadian West than there was anywhere else and a country that can market close on 70,000,000 bushels of wheat out of a damaged crop is not likely to discourage the new comer from taking a hand. Many of the American farmers of the middle west are just now planting corn and as soon as that is completed huge excursions are coming to the Canadian West with these men as land-seekers. If they want anything better to look at than the Canadian West at the present time they are indeed hard to please. But they are not hard to please, they know a good thing when they see it and just now the Canadian West looks pretty good to them as an investment.

The situation for the week is good, very good. There is not too much money floating around in the matter of collections, there are some people still out of work and hard up, but taken as a whole the country was never in better condition, prospects were never better and people were never working harder than they are to-day.

FRUIT GROWERS OBJECT.

To Recent Arrangement of Toronto Commissioners' Association.

The action of the recently-formed "Toronto Fruit and Produce Association," mentioned in last week's Canadian Grocer. in charging a uniform rate to all shippers of goods on commission has evidently created a stir among the fruit growers of the Lake Ontario district, giving the matter some prominence. A despatch of Tuesday last, May 26, states that the fruit growers on the north and south shores of Lake Ontario do not feel kindly towards the Toronto fruit commission merchants, and have pledged themselves not to submit to the schedule of extra charges. They are organizing with a view to selling their small fruit f.o.b. at railway stations. This action, they think, will compel the commission merchants to become wholesale fruit merchants instead of receivers of consignments of fruit for sale. The growers believe this change will give greater satisfaction to themselves and eventually prove satisfactory to the merchants.

Quotations on Staple and Special Lines of Groceries From Various Points in Canada—Notes and Tendencies From the Markets Abroad.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Declined.
Beans—Advanced.
Butter—Declined.
Fruits—Slight decline.
Fish—Some lines declined.

Montreal, May 28, 1908.

It has been thought for some time that a decline in sugar would soon take place, and this conjecture became a reality on May 22, when all lines dropped 10c to 15c.

The chief feature of cheese and butter markets seems to be the increase in supplies which are coming in. The anxiously looked for improvement in export trade does not seem to have arrived yet in cheese. Eggs are coming down in price with the advancing of the warm season. The feed and flour markets remain about as usual. Flour happens to be one of those commodities for which the demand remains fairly steady. The warm weather has brightened up the tapioca market somewhat. This product being classed rather as a light food has certain very prominent advantages over other foods for summer consumption. Dealers in foodstuffs report an ever-increasing knowledge among consumers regarding the suitability of certain foods for certain seasons and every year tapioca is being more generally recognized as a very delectable article of diet for warm weather, also possessing very advantageous dietetic qualities.

Last year and this year resemble one another very closely in the Japan tea market, prices have such a close resemblance to one another in their various fluctuations. An importer indicates a slight increase over last year in some of the high grades, but otherwise the trend is about the same. Beans continue strong, with an upward tendency. Fish and fruits have both had contradictory movements, some lines going up and others going down, both markets have exhibited considerable activity.

SUGAR—A drop has taken place in the sugar market. This movement was expected as it was thought that the prevailing high prices would soon have to break, and the expected has happened. On May 22 nearly all lines declined from 10c to 15c. Dealers report trade passing fairly good.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—There is still good demand for canned vegetables and canned fruits. Canned fish is in good demand, especially sardines and salmon, other lines being somewhat neglected. There is a good call for lobsters, but the supply is exhausted. Canned meats meet with an indifferent demand, packers being short of some lines, especially canned roast beef. No prices are out yet for the new pack.

TORONTO.—Demand has been rather more brisk the past week, the warm weather having a stimulating effect and goods are moving out well. This applies to nearly all lines of vegetables and fruits. There is some call for salmon and sardines, and it is expected that with the opening of the picnic season and with the hot weather, demand this will be greater.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Declined 10 cents.
Prunes—Scarce.
Canned Goods—Moving well.
Collections—Fair.

Toronto, May 28, 1908.

The wholesale markets still continue quiet and some jobbers admit freely that business is disappointing. Everyone is looking forward, however, to the harvest with expectancy, and it is hoped that good business during the summer and fall will make up for the dullness being experienced just at present. The retailers seem to be continuing to buy on a hand to mouth basis, and lines of luxuries for which there is usually an active demand at this time of the year, are being to a large extent tabooed.

Travelers report better business and a better outlook in Western Ontario, and this condition seems bound to be felt in other districts shortly.

The only notable feature of the week was the decline in sugar. This was rather contrary to the expectations of the best informed dealers and with the present condition of the market, can scarcely be permanent. Beans continue very firm, otherwise staple goods are held about the same as at last reports.

SUGAR—A drop of ten cents at the week end was an unexpected feature in a week of quiet business. Market conditions both in the United States and Europe assumed a considerably easier basis last week, and Canadian refiners, following the general conditions made the decline on refined. Since the recent large advances business has fallen off considerably, and this drop may stimulate this to some extent. The markets seem to have hinged on the Cuban crop, which seems to be more promising than was expected.

The general situation is well explained in Czarnikow, McDougall & Co.'s report, dated May 22, as follows:

"The week has been one of considerable activity in raw sugars, but the activity has been at the expense of values, for the business done has been at a decline of $1.25 on last week's sales of sugars in same position.

"The record of sales goes far to explain why such a decline should take place at a time when the outlook for supplies for summer wants is no greater than it was a month ago, when prices were 25c higher. The reported transactions show that the sales consisted of sugars in port and about due, and of sugars afloat from Porto Rico and San Domingo, and, therefore, due to arrive within a week or ten days.

"Under any circumstances, it would have been difficult to uphold prices in the face of the selling pressure arising from offerings of such a large quantity of sugar that must be taken care of immediately, but when we remember that receipts in the last six weeks have been 367,000 tons and estimated meltings in the same period have been only 241,000 tons, we have further explanation for the decline. In six weeks refiners have added over 117,000 tons to their stocks, and as these now stand at 320,000 tons, it is not surprising that refiners declined to make further additions to them unless at a concession in price that would cover the cost of storing and carrying their new purchases. Sellers have themselves to blame for the position they have found themselves in, and the present week's lesson is one they have had year after year and will continue to have so long as they take the risk of shipping sugars before they are sold.

"Europe, which is at present extremely sensitive to market movements here, followed our decline, but did not keep pace with it. It is upon the Cuban crop that both markets have hinged, and Europe seems to interpret the reaction in prices here as a proof that the shortage of that crop is not going to be so great as predicted; in other words, Europe seems to say: 'If you have so little sugar left in Cuba, why be in such haste to sell it as to break prices?' Why, indeed?

"European beet markets were firm and dearer early in the week, but the news of the decline here had a bad effect, and the market is lower all round."

Since this was written the raw situation has firmed up again and what will take place in the next few days cannot well be prophecied. In any event, with the huge demand of the preserving season coming on, it is safe to say that prices will recur to the recent basis, if not higher.

A notable feature applying to the American market was the announcement that after May 21 the American and National, or Howell, refineries, gave notice that they will take orders only for prompt snipment, the price to be guaranteed to date of arrival.

This means that the former method of selling refined on contracts, with privilege of withdrawals for shipment as wanted within 30, 60 or 90 days, is done away with.

TEA—Local business continues on the same basis with little activity.

In regard to the general situation Thompson Bros.' report, dated, London, May 14, says: "With the knowledge that the Indian crop is being closed more rapidly than has been the custom for the last year or so, and while Ceylon hardly seems able to supply the wants of the world for the next three months, the bidding in the sale room was animated for all grades, except perhaps for the commonest leaf, tippy teas especially doing well. By mail a few musters of the coming crop from Darjeeling and Terai have arrived, which seem to show that good useful quality with some flavor may be looked for early in the season from these districts and such should command a ready sale as the market is quite bare of these sorts."

COFFEE—Dealers report business a little dull this week with no new features in evidence in the local markets. Referring to the general situation Willett & Gray say:

"Referring to the allusion that the San Paulo Government would not sell any of their coffees privately at the basis of 50 francs, they have since announced their preference to sell at public auction, and it is reported from Hamburg that 50,000 bags will be offered that way in Hamburg and 10,000 bags in Rotterdam on May 29, with 50 francs as the upset price. While the markets have for the moment taken this action as a bear-point, it will be very interesting to watch the outcome.

DRIED FRUITS—Business is only fair. Prunes continue scarce among local houses and some of the wholesalers are complaining of the quality of the goods shipped them. In several instances shipments have had to be returned. Valencia raisins seem to be in fairly good supply and there has been some cutting indulged in by local jobbers.

Advices from Greece this week note firmer prices on currants with demand better.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 9 a.m. Thursday, May 21, 1908.)

POINTERS—

Drop in Sugar.
Raisins—Cheaper.
Decline in pot barley.
Beans—Advanced.
Butter Cheaper.

All conditions are favorable for the growing crops and the outlook in this respect is the best in several years. Business is showing considerable improvement in sympathy with the improved outlook.

Sugar made a sensational drop last week. The demand has been very light at the recent high prices and the decline is expected to encourage consumption. Local wholesale houses are carrying heavy stocks of some lines of canned fruits, the high prices established by the canners last fall having discouraged the demand. Raisins are cheaper. Condensed milk and cream have been in very scant supply all winter and spring. New supplies are now on the local market.

CANNED GOODS—Sales of many lines of canned fruits have been slow because of the high prices established last fall by the canning interests and local houses are carrying large stocks of some lines.

SUGAR—The price has declined to the following figures:

SHOULD NOT SHIP GREEN CHEESE

This Practice Injuring Canadian Export Business.

A circular recently issued by J. A. Ruddick, Canadian Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner, warning buyers and manufacturers of cheese against the practice of shipping green cheese, contains information which will be read by the trade generally with interest and profit. Mr. Ruddick says:

"The writer has lost no opportunity during the past two years of calling attention to the danger of injuring the Canadian cheese trade by the practice of shipping the cheese in a green condition. I am now able to quote—from communications on the subject recently addressed to the Minister of Agriculture, by the Home & Foreign Produce Exchange, of London, England, and the Bristol Provision Trade Association, in words which would indicate that harm has already been done to the cheese trade by this penny wise, pound foolish practice.

"The first mentioned association, writes in part as follows:

" 'Importers of Canadian cheese into London met in conference to consider what steps should be taken to bring into prominence the damage which is being occasioned to the reputation of Canadian cheese owing to the persistent practice on the part of factorymen of sending out their makes before the goods have had time to mature, and I have been instructed to lay the matter before you in the hope that prompt and efficient steps may be taken to effect a remedy.

" 'It is unquestionable that there is an increasing tendency for makers to get quit of their cheese as quickly as possible. In a great many instances goods are moved out much too soon, in some cases even within two or three days of manufacture. The result has been that the natural process of maturing has been arrested and such cheese arrive here insipid in flavor and in a condition which reflects anything but credit upon the product. In addition to this, the excessive moisture militates severely against the sale. In no circumstances should cheese be allowed to leave the factory until ten days after manufacture. That is the minimum of time which should elapse before the goods are moved and unless stringent measures are adopted to prevent the factorymen sending their cheese out earlier, the position of the Canadian article on the London market will become depreciated.'

"The foregoing is from a body of merchants who handle nearly one-half of the cheese exported from Canada.

"The Bristol Provision Trade Association's letter contains the following sentence:

" 'This means the forcing into consumption of immature, or, in other words, inferior cheese, resulting in widespread dissatisfaction. Needless to say, the tendency of this is to bring Canadian cheese into disfavor, and if persisted in, it is bound greatly to curtail consumption.'

"It would seem to be unnecessary to add anything to these statements made by those who are in the best position to speak with authority on the question.

"I would only say that while I was in Great Britain last fall, I found plenty of evidence to prove that the trade has already been injured by the unbusinesslike policy of shipping the cheese before they are fit to eat. Whenever this question is brought up among dairymen, there seems to be an inclination to put the blame on the buyer and let it go at that. The buyers are certainly responsible for encouraging the movement of green cheese, but the dairymen who have been the losers, and who will be the losers again, should not allow their business to be injured in this way.

LARGE MACARONI IMPORTS.

Demand Growing Rapidly in Canada and Business Increasing.

Some hint as to the extent of the sales of macaroni in Canada may be judged from the fact that Chas. Ciceri, Toronto, on May 26, received an importation of 7,900 cases (75,800 pounds) from Italy. It is the intention of this firm to import similar shipments once a month for the Canadian trade.

Quietness Ruling in Markets After Holiday—Butter Easier and Likely to Slump—Cheese Fairly Steady, With New Make Coming in——Canadian Produce Lost on Way to Great Britain.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, May 28, 1908.

With more or less frequency English shippers have called attention to the fact that Canadian shippers were placing an inferior quality of cheese on the English market, which they regard as extremely imprudent in view of the fact that the difficulty consists merely of too much haste in shipping the product after it has been made. Some of the blame, however, may be accredited the factory men who hurry their stock out in two or three days, when it should not be moved for ten days at least. The English importers regard the custom as an extremely foolish one, because, as they point out, so little is gained, and if persisted in, it will lead to the complete eliminaton of Canadian cheese from the English markets. The Home and Foreign Produce Exchange, of London, have memorialized the Hon. Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, regarding the practice. The Bristol Provision Trade Association have complained bitterly of this unfortunate conditon, and have sent repeated warnings to this side of the Atlantic regarding the matter. These complaints coming from England have led to some investigation on this side, and it is generally conceded that it will be very difficult to check the practice without legislation of some kind. It is very easy for a dealer to say to a factory man, "Ship on your cheese, we have facilities for curing it" and this shipper may have all good intentions, but then an opportunity arises for him to sell at an advantageous price, and the result is that green cheese goes to the other side, and the usual complaints arise. This same shipper may not think that his transgression will amount to anything, but when others think the same the sum of the mischief done amounts to a national disadvantage.

The Dominion cold storage and dairy commissioner, J. A. Ruddick, has called attention to this regrettable phase of Canadian trade in no unmistakable language. In his letter he quotes from letters received by him from the leading British produce associations and merchants, all of which deprecate this unfortunate practice. To say the least, it displays exceedingly bad judgment, because the day may come when Canada will be keen about the British market, more so, perhaps, than she is now, and then these impressions which are taking root now will offer a very serious obstacle to the promotion of Canadian trade. So much publicity has been given this matter it is hoped that something definite will be arrived at, and the danger removed.

Quotations for to-day are 11c and 11¼c for Quebec and Townships, and 11¼c-11½c for Ontario cheese for export purposes. Dealers are expecting fairly steady prices, as the make is lighter than at this time last year.

The butter trade is good and receipts are light. Shipments are now coming principally by refrigerator freight cars. Although the supply has been considerably augmented there are no accumulations as yet. There is little dairy butter arriving. It is thought there may be a little packing being done in Western Ontario, but in other parts of the country farmers have not yet commenced packing. Creamery for export purposes is quoted at 22c to 22½c for fresh receipts, while dairy is placed at 20c to 21c in to-day's quotations for tubs and rolls. The Board of Trade returns for the week ending May 23 showed receipts of butter to be 6,482 packages against 4,871 packages for the same period last year. These figures are pleasing as they show a decided increase. For the season up to May 23 total receipts were 10,600 packages against 15,522 packages for the same period last year. Although the last week shows a wonderful improvement we are not yet up to last year's record. The weekly receipts of cheese for 1908 and 1907 were 21,032 boxes for the former and 22,519 boxes for the latter year, while for the season of 1908 it stands 57,830 boxes against 79,434 boxes for 1907.

THE PROVISION SITUATION

Toronto May 27, 1908.

There has been little change in the situation since the report chronicled last week. So far as export business is concerned the English market continues draggy, being well supplied last week with the Danish product, and is not at all eager to buy Canadian goods. The oft repeated factor, the light supplies of hogs, is also having its effect. A few firms, however, continue to do a little export business even under present conditions.

A feature of interest during the week was the loss of the Thompson liner Latona which resulted from a collision with the Jopanae, off the Lizard a week ago to-day. The steamer's cargo, besides a host of other Canadian produce, contained 793 packages of meats. Among those represented in this shipment were the Wm. Davies Co., Toronto; the Geo. Matthews Co., of Peterboro; the Ingersoll Packing Co., the Whyte Packing Co., of Stratford; the Canadian Packing Co., of London; and the Fearman Co., of Hamilton. While the vessel and cargo are a total loss, these were said to be well insured and the packers interested expecte they will be fully recouped.

The Danes continue to send over large supplies of meat to the British market, last week's killings being well up to the average. The shipments from the United States on the other hand, have been light as is evidenced in the following resume of conditions from the New York Journal of Commerce:

"The past week has been extremely dull outside of the option market for hog products, and even there there has been no activity and at times extremely dull when the packers did not take a hand. They, for the most part, have remained neutral, keeping the hogs and product market in equilibrium and awaiting events. There have been neither bull nor bear features to affect prices to any extent, and the market is dragging because no one is sufficiently interested outside of the packers to increase the trading. Instead of consumption improving, it seems to be growing less, as we are getting near the summer months and it looks as if we were going to have a very dull season. The ham trade has not even started owing to the cold, wet spring, and the dealers have not bought ahead as usual, partly for the reason that packers have not encouraged it and partly because of fear of a bad season, as we often have bad ham years, when there are no hard times.

"The hog supply has been a little more liberal, but it has been attributed, for the most part, to the unusually wet weather in the corn belt, which has prevented the farmers planting and given them more time to market their hogs."

Under a fair local demand prices are on the same level as at last report. Local packers are offering $5.75 to $5.85 for hogs f.o.b. country points. For the animals off cars at factory $6.10 is offered.

Canadian packers are certainly handicapped by the fact the farmers seems to be going out of hog-raising. This is a serious consideration and one which the farmer should be made to think about.

PROVISIONS—Only a normal business was done last week, the holiday in no way helping trade. Bacon has a firmer tendency, though present prices are the same as a week ago. Lard, too, is stiff in price. This is due to the scarcity of hogs. While butter remains high, lard will be in demand, and there will be little chance of it lowering in price. Warm weather is needed to help along the provision trade. Prices in all lines remain unchanged, and both supply and demand are only fair.

BUTTER—With better grass in the country the prices of butter are coming down. The farmers say the cows are giving double the quantity of milk they gave ten days ago, and there is almost a certainty of grass butter being placed on the market next week. Indeed, a little is now offering in some of the country places, though the quality is not just what the market requires, being mixed with the older stock. Traders are getting off the stock of butter on hand, and getting ready for the new grass brand when it is ready to come in. Prices will likely go lower before the end of the month. Dealers says the price of butter during the past winter, and, indeed, during the past two years, has been altogether too high, and if here is any quantity of new butter offering, the price pendulum may swing to the other extreme and put the article on the market at a price much below its value. Butter-buying is being done on an economical basis.

EGGS—Dealers are still holding out for lower prices, but as yet there has been no decline. In fact, prices are quite firm and remain at the same figures quoted a week ago. There will be very few stored at present prices, as traders are rather afraid to take risks at such a high figure. The egg supply is fairer than a month ago, and fills the present easy demand.

CHEESE—Old cheese is still rising slightly at the rate of about half a cent a week, while the new cheese is getting easier with increasing supplies. There may be a slightly firmer price for a while, owing to the loss of the Thompson liner, Latona, which went down in a collision off the Lizard with 18,000 cheese, besides a great quantity of other Ontario produce. The grass cheese, however, may help the situation, as up to now we have been getting only the fodder variety.

THE FLOUR AND CEREAL MARKETS

Strong Wheat Markets Causing Firmer Tendency in Flour — Cereal Business Dull—Small Amount of Export Business.

The cereal markets continue quiet this week with few new features to report.

The firm wheat market of the week has induced some talk of higher prices on flour among millers, but at time of writing no change had been made and none seems likely, at least, within the next few days. Some export business was done during the week and inquiries for Canadian flour seem to be more frequent from Great Britain. Local demand continues fairly active.

Cereal manufacturers report dull business in accordance with the season. Supplies are coming in fairly well, but local demand is only fair.

Eastern markets show one or two changes in oatmeal and rolled oats. Otherwise prices all round are unchanged.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—With a firm wheat market there is an upward tendency to flour prices this week, though at time of writing no changes had been made. Some little export business has been done during the week, shipments being made to London, and this shows that the market is on a healthy basis. Local demand is good and the situation seems a little brighter than last week.

GOOD PROSPECTS IN THE WEST.

W. P. Eby, Returned From Extended Trip, Tells of Existing Conditions.

W. P. Eby, sales manager for Eby-Blain, Toronto, returned last week from a six weeks' business trip through Western Canada to the Pacific Coast. While in the West Mr. Eby made special inquiries as to the conditions prevailing in the salmon industry, so that some idea might be obtained as to the prospects for the fall pack, and also in regard to prospects for the California dried fruit crop for the coming season.

"Taken generally," says Mr. Eby, "conditions throughout the West were much better than I had expected, and business was beyond our expectations. The prospects are most encouraging for a large crop, and this fall we should see busy times in the West and British Columbia."

"Has the financial trouble been evident further West?" he was asked.

"Yes, the depression has been keenly felt in every town and city, but the unusual conditions have been, I consider, a blessing in disguise to many of the merchants. It has obliged them to curtail their credit business and develop their cash trade, and even where it entailed a smaller volume of business, the results have been in nearly every case satisfactory. Another effect has been the careful inspection of the stocks and analyzing of business, with the result that the western merchants have realized, probably for the first time, that as a rule they give too much credit, and carry too large stocks for the volume of business especially in dry goods, boots and shoes, furs, etc., and as a consequence the spring orders in these lines, I understand, are much lighter than usual. The general impression, while very optimistic, is that there will not be much activity in trade in the west and British Columbia until the crop is pretty well assured. On my way west, about the middle of April, seeding was in full swing, and on my return in May I saw wheat up three and four inches, and the country generally in splendid condition."

"How about conditions in B.C.?"

"In British Columbia, while trade was very good all fall and winter, the wave of depression only seemed to have recently arrived. The lumber business at present is at a standstill, and as lumbering is one of the most important industries of the province, it has naturally affected every branch of trade. Unlike our Ontario lumber merchants, the British Columbia mills do practically no export business, and as their trade has been confined exclusively to the Prairie Provinces, they find business at present very quiet, with little prospect of further activity until the crop in the West is assured."

"Are the reports of small salmon pack borne out on the spot?" he was asked.

"The salmon packers this season are expecting and providing for a very small catch," was the reply, "as this is what is known as the 'lean year.' Should there, however, be a large run of fish, which is quite improbable, the packers would be unable to pack the fish, as they have only provided for a small catch, and tins could not be rushed up many miles to the factories at a moment's notice.

"At the head of the lake at Port Arthur and Fort William," says Mr. Eby, "the reports were most satisfactory. Trade, in the grocery business especially, has been good throughout the winter.

"With such favorable conditions for a bountiful crop this season and the general improvement in the methods of doing business, there should undoubtedly be good times in Western Canada this fall.

"Eby-Blain, Limited, have done a large business in Western Canada for over a quarter of a century, and while we think it is prudent to exercise caution for the present, we have the most unbounded faith in the future prosperity of that vast country."

HINTS FOR APPLE EXPORTERS

Nova Scotian, Who Has Been Studying British Market, Gives Suggestions for Improving Export Trade.

Howard Bligh, a leading Halifax produce merchant and shipper, returned recently from England, where he made a thorough study of the apple market with a view to getting information which would benefit Canadian exporters, particularly those in Nova Scotia. The suggestions he offers, however, will be of interest to fruit exporters and growers in all parts of Canada.

Must Grow Best Fruit.

"Every grower must do his utmost," says Mr. Bligh, "to grow the largest, cleanest, well colored fruit of best varieties that are wanted by the buyers and to cut out and top graft with best sorts, all inferior kinds that are now disliked by the buyers so that in time they will have the varieties that are wanted. Ben Davis, Talman Sweets, Grimes Golden, and Vandeveres, should be replaced by other varieties that are liked by the buyers. A very large quantity of Ben Davis are shipped each season to the other side, but this variety is getting more disliked by the English buyers every year.

"The fruit should be packed under the co-operative system, so as to guarantee quality, and also to put large parcels of any one variety on the market at one time and do away with the small parcels of so many different varieties as at present.

"Fruit growers should ship fruit only when it is matured and colored fit for shipment, and to ship in such quantities as the market requires, and not to overdo the business and crush prices. This is a matter that requires much experience, skill and good management

"Pack only No. 1 and No. 2 fruit except in seasons when the market will accept No. 3 fruit of best varieties at paying prices.

"Ship the different varieties of fruit in the proper season, and avoid putting on the market, before it is wanted, a variety not wanted until a certain time, or until the buyer is ready for that variety. We must not forget that the buyer is a most important man in this business, and it is to his wants that the growers and shippers must cater.

Growers Must Work Together.

"Growers must work together more in harmony and adopt means of packing their apples under one brand or mark which may be arranged by co-operative work so that they have parcels of bulk and quantity to attract the buyers or speculators (if such are to be found) and thereby get best prices, or if shipped on consignment to the markets abroad, will bring top prices to the shippers, the buyers knowing the stock to be good and genuine.

Must Regain Buyers' Confidence.

"The speculator never can find, under our present system of packing such quantities of any one variety of apples under one mark such as he may want, and when he does speculate, he very seldom gets what he buys. This has virtually killed the buying by English merchants who have been buyers in the past and who would still be buyers if they can only get fruit that they can depend upon. This will prove a severe loss if we cannot regain these buyers' confidence.

"New markets should be found if possible and no doubt can be found if the business is managed properly. Every effort should be put forth by the different fruit growers' associations to urge the government to secure again the German markets for our fruit by getting the heavy duty that is now imposed upon our apples entering Germany reduced to the same, or lower, duty than the Americans pay at present."

INFORMATION THAT PAYS.

Carelessness in securing reliable information at the time an account is opened is frequently the cause of a loss to the merchant later on. The average merchant to-day keeps his accounts in much better shape than the man in the retail business ten years ago, but there is still much room for improvement in many cases.

As a bank demands the fullest particulars when lending money, even in cases where it holds security for the loan, so should the business man request his customers to tell him something about their personal affairs, before extending them credit, which is practically the same as loaning them money.

Oftentimes some merchants depend entirely upon their ability to read human nature. A respectable looking woman will apply for credit, give her name and address and state that Mr. So-and-So works for such-and-such a concern. An account will be opened, forthwith, whereas a little investigation may develop the fact that this party, although apparently well to do, owes a bill at some dry goods store, has bought furniture on the installment plan and does not pay anything unless compelled to.

An up-to-date retail grocer in deploring recently this habit of carelessness, said, "I pride myself that I lose a smaller percentage each year from bad debts than the average merchant in my line. Of course, I get stuck occasionally, when sickness or misfortune overtakes a customer, but I am extremely careful in getting as much information as possible before any goods leave my store for a new customer. I don't trust to my memory, but have a regular printed blank which I fill out and keep on file, which reads as follows:

Wife's name .....
Address ... .
Owns property .....
Formerly traded at .....
Before that, traded at .....
Husband is employed at .....
Receives his wages (weekly or monthly) ... .
Expect that the account will run about ... .
Will settle (weekly or monthly) ....

"As a rule I ask a great many questions in addition to those enumerated on the above blank form, but this list gives me a pretty good basis to work on and I always hold a customer strictly to the terms agreed upon at the time the account is opened. I always try to find out the amount of wages the husband draws, but some families are a litle touchy on this point, and as I fill out the blank in the presence of the customer, I know that some of them will hesitate about giving the correct amount of wages.

"I always make it a point to call up the different people with whom my customers have formerly traded, and as I am on comparatively friendly terms with the other business men of my city, I nearly always get the correct report of the customer's standing with them."

HOMELY TRUTHS.

Your influence in your store each day is an important element in your success or your failure.

The proprietor should be a helpful leader.

A cheerful "good morning" pushes the work along; a glum face retards it.

Show that you are blue or feeling out-of-sorts when you enter the store in the morning, and you have placed a handicap on the day's operations.

On the other hand, begin your day's work cheerfully, and you impart the same feeling with an equal amount of added ambition to the entire force.

OUR NOVA SCOTIA LETTER

New Wholesale Grocery for Truro—Embargo on Produce Vessels Dropped—Iced Fish Cars for Fresh Shipments.

Halifax, N.S., May 23, 1908.

H. B. Cassidy, of Baird & Peters, St. John, was in Truro, N.S., several days this week. Baird & Peters intend opening a wholesale grocery business in Truro shortly. Mr. Cassidy, who has been connected with the firm for the past twelve years will manage the Truo business. This branch will be opened right away, as the firm have a building in sight that is centrally located. The new wholesale house will no doubt get a good share of the business of the town and surrounding country.

Hedley Richardson is fixing up the former Dakin store in Windsor, N.S., and thoroughly renovating it throughout. He will be ready for business next week, and has already secured a first-class line of groceries. Mr. Richardson is well known throughout Hants County, having been with Mr. Dodge in his Water St. store for several years.

E. L. Henry, formerly of Boston, who has been connected with the dairy and produce business in Prince Edward Island for several years, intends engaging in the same business in Sydney, C.B.

The vexed question of the licensing of produce vessels, which has formed the text for many discourses on the part of both consumers and wholesale dealers in Sydney, C.B., since the passage of the ordinance three years ago has been put at rest, for a time at least by an amendment recently introduced at a meeting of the city council. Under the amendment Prince Edward Island produce vessels or vessels for that matter from any other port may dispose of their wares without applying to the authorities for a license to do so. Previous to the passage of this amendment only the farmers or market gardeners who sold their produce were exempt from the embargo.

The Intercolonial Railway last week inaugurated an iced car service for fresh fish to Montreal and hereafter on every Tuesday a refrigerator car will leave Mulgrave, N.S., and another will leave Halifax. If there is not enough fish to warrant two cars being sent, the fish will be transferred to one car at Truro. This is the outcome of an arrangement entered into between the Marine and Fisheries Department and the I.C.R. The cost of the service is guaranteed by the Marine and Fisheries Department. This service will be of great benefit to the fish jobbers along the coast, as fresh fish will be landed in Montreal soon after being taken from the water.

The consumer received the welcome news this week of a break in the butter markets, and prices are now on a downward tendency. The decline in the local prices is about five cents per pound. The receipts of butter are increasing daily, and the grocers are jubilant over the changed conditions. Creamery prints are quoted at 30 cents and solids at 25 cents. Dairy butter in small tubs is quoted at 25 to 27 cents, according to the quality. Some of the commission houses are buying butter in Montreal for local consumption, as prices there are lower than they are in this province.

Jobbers report a good demand for fruit and the market is well supplied. The pines received here this week were of a very fine quality, the best so far this season. The price ranged from 18 to 25 cents. The quality of the bananas was also improved and they are quoted at $2 to $2.50. Oranges are very firm. California navels are scarce and they are quoted at $3.50 to $4. Jamaicas are worth $6 and Valencias range from $5 to $6. Lemons are quoted at $2.75 for 380 count and cocoanuts are selling at $3.50 to $4 per hundred. Strawberries are coming down in price and this week they were quoted at 22 cents by the crate.

Vegetables are in brisk demand. Potatoes are quoted at $1.65 to $1.80 per bag, parsnips at $1.75 per bag, beets at $1.50 per bag and carrots and turnips at $1.75 per bag. Egyptian onions are quoted ot $2.75 per bag of 120 lbs. Cucumbers are quoted at 8 cents each and rhubarb at 6 cents per lb. American cabbage has dropped 50 cents per barrel and this week is quoted at $2.

Eggs are coming in more plentifully but the price holds very firm. Jobbers had expected a drop in the price this week, but so far there is no break. The general opinion prevails that eggs are too high for the season of the year. Nova Scotia eggs are quoted at 19 cents and Prince Edward Island at 18 cents.

TRADE NEWS OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Trade Improvement Expected Though Markets Are Quiet—Seed Markets Cleaned Up—Good Prospects for Sar dines.

Special Correspondence to The Canadian Grocer.

St. John, N.B., May 24.

The jobbers are looking for some improvement in trade now that the roads are drying up and are getting in better shape. Business has been fair but it is hoped it will be much better from now on.

The seed market, as far as the jobbers are concerned, is practically bare. It has been one of the best clean-up's the dealers have ever had. There is no alsike clover to be had while the supply of red and mammoth is limited to a few bags and timothy is practically exhausted. The reason for such a condition is attributed to the high prices which caused light buying and in consequence everything has been sold out and there will be no stocks carried over for next year.

The markets have been practically undisturbed during the past week, prices for the most part being unchanged.

Baird & Peters, of St. John, are still branching out. Their latest move is the opening of a branch in Truro, N.S.. H. B. Cassidy, formerly one of their traveling salesmen, has been placed in charge of the branch.

This firm now has branches in Newcastle, Campbellton and Truro, with the central depot at St. John.

One of the most enterprising firms in the smaller towns of this province is that of Ritchie & Hardaker, of Chipman, Queen's County. The partnership is a new one formed to carry on the business hitherto conducted by Mr. Ritchie himself. They have just opened a large new addition to the store and carry a full line of groceries as well as other goods usually found in a general store. The firm is also contemplating the opening of a branch at Minto in the fall.

George M. Byron of Campabella, who was in the city last week, told The Grocer correspondent that a very successful season is being looked for in the sardine factories in his section. There is a big demand for sardines and lobsters are also being taken plentifully. The dealers are buying lobsters now at ten cents each and at this price the canners are kept busy.

Joseph Morgan, formerly a commission broker here, has engaged with the H. W. Cole Co. and will represent them through the Annapolis Valley and Digby neck territory.

J. Aubrey Upham, representing the St. Croix Soap Manufacturing Co., makers of Surprise Soap, has been in St. John recently making window displays and distributing new premium books. Mr. Upham has been all through the Maritime Provinces booming Surprise and the excellent window displays have attracted considerable attention and should result in an increased demand for the company's products.

John Turnbull, general manager of the Nasmith Company, Limited, bakers, Toronto, has withdrawn from that concern to enter business on his own account. H. C. Nasmith will be Mr. Turnbull's successor.

Strawberries

Have to arrive this week, one car each day of fine stock, the best that can be procured. They are Marylands, Delawares and Virginias. Prices will be some easier, will bill at lowest market prices.

Pineapple market is little higher on 24s, fruit is fine and demand heavy.

Have full supply of Oranges, Lemons, Cabbage, Cucumbers, Onions, Tomatoes, Asparagus, etc.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Markets Very Active in Consequence of Warm Weather and Holiday Business —New Lines of Fruit Arriving—Prices Generally Firm.

A splendid week's business was concluded on Saturday last in the different lines of fruit, vegetables and fish. The week was warm, the days were bright and sunshiny, and the advent of the first spring holiday—Victoria or Empire Day—put buyers in a good mood, and business went with a rush. Stocks were soon depleted and the dealers were jubilant, though rather afraid they could not meet the demand. Financial depression was not even breathed and the way money kept changing hands put the pessimist to rout. The best week of the spring augurs well for the opening of the fruit season, which in a short while will be on us with a rush. Canadian fruit and berries are reported to be coming along nicely, though a little backward owing to the rather chilly weather of the past month or so. The quality is said to be first-class and the quantity on the whole better than last year, while the dealers expect fully as good a season's business as a year ago.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—Strawberries continue to be quoted at 17c to 19c, which is only a decline of one cent since last week. This is not according to predictions, as it was thought that our own crop, which it is expected will be very large, would have exerted a greater downward tendency on the imported fruit. Other fruits do not show any alteration in price.

FISH—Haddock and shad have declined slightly in price this week, while whitefish has advanced a little, maximum price now reaching 11c. Brook trout are arriving more freely and the price is lower. There are no fresh B.C. salmon arriving yet, and the price continues high. Lake fish are now in better supply.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—A first-rate business was done during the past week and all the dealers are wearing smiles. A visit to the various fruit houses reveals the fact that most of the stocks were very much depleted the last few days of the week just closed and immediately preceding the holiday. New arrivals, however, are now coming in and the market has a bright and fresh appearance. Prices are fairly firm with a slight lowering tendency, and though some lines are easier than a week ago there is nothing in the drop to call forth special comment.

Mediterranean fruit is arriving more freely, and berries are gradually working nearer home. This week the first Baltimore strawberries are expected in Toronto. California sweet oranges are fairly plentiful, but navels are becoming exhausted, especially is this so in the smaller varieties. Carload lots of pineapples, bananas and strawberries are arriving almost daily. Lemons are firm in price with a fair demand.

VEGETABLES—Tomatoes are about the finest of the imported lines offered on the market and are of good quality. Florida tomatoes are still coming in, but the Texas variety will soon displace them, as that State has already supplanted Florida potatoes. Egyptian onions remain firm in price but Bermudas are a little easier. Large lots of cabbage are still arriving and appear to be of better quality than those offered a week ago. All the Canadian green lines are easier and are taking the place of imported greens. A few green peas are offered and no doubt will be easier in price with a more abundant supply. Cucumbers are arriving more freely, but the prices remain firm.

FISH—A very fair business has been done and both supply and demand are keeping up well. The prices remain firm and unchanged. Sea salmon is expected to be on the Toronto market next week. CHALLENGES STATEMENT IN ADVERTISEMENT.

Editor Canadian Grocer:

In your issue of May 22 there appeared an advertisement signed, T. H. Estabrooks, of St. John, N.B. In it he stated, when alluding to "Red Rose" tea, that between the years 1896 and 1898 they had "a record of growth for twelve years that has never been equalled in the history of the tea trade."

We are rather tired of this kind of advertising, as we consider it is not according to facts, hence the following challenge:

We are prepared to devote $1,000 to any charity to be named by Mr. Estabrooks, if "Salada" has not had a much larger increase in the period named.

Our $1,000 is now ready to be put up on the instant, and our books open for examination. Mr. Estabrooks, if he intends to accept this challenge, must put up his $1,000, and forfeit it if his printed statement is not correct. If his statement proves correct, we will forfeit our $1,000. If this challenge is not accepted, the readers of your paper will understand what value there is to be placed on his future statements. We are quite willing to leave the matter entirely to any responsible firm of accountants in Toronto or Montreal, the editor of The Canadian Grocer to choose the firm, and we both to abide by their decision, the loser to pay all expenses.

The Salada Tea Company,

GROCERY FACTS.

Information of Value to Grocers and Clerks.

The Manufacture of Vanilla—The vanilla used in this country comes mostly from Mexico in the form of long, brown, polished beans, which are tied up in bundles which weight about one-half to a pound and which are kept in air-tight packages so that the rich aroma will not be dissipated. This particular rich aroma, characteristic of the vanilla, is developed by a complicated process of fermentation.

The beans are first stored away under cover until they begin to shrivel and then they are "sweated" by being heated. After that they are enclosed in air-tight boxes over night. After two or three days of this treatment the beans become brown and have a moist appearance. Then they are exposed for a long time, sometimes several months, to the sun to dry before they are packed into little bundles and shipped to the United States. The Cooking Club describes one method of manufacture, as follows:

At the extract manufactory the beans are first run through a chopping machine, which turns them into something like mince meat. Each extract maker has his secret formula of mixing the "charge" before it is thrown into a large kettle, but a quantity of the best lump sugar is mixed with the other ingredients. In the kettle the temperature is gradually raised to the boiling point, where it is kept for about forty-eight hours. The sugar absorbs the aroma to a large degree, and when the charge is taken from the kettle it resembles coffee grounds after the liquid coffee has been poured off.

A certain amount of the "charge" is poured off into a keg having a capacity of about twenty gallons, five gallons of deodorized spirits are added, and then it is placed in a store-room with others just like it. The date of entrance is labeled on each keg, and at the end of a year, during which time the alcohol absorbs the vanilla from the sugar and bits of chopped beans, the material is ready for the next process.

The vanilla liquor, as it is called, is forced through an ordinary filter press, where the impurities are removed, the dark brown colored stream flows from the press, and that is the pure vanilla extract, which is kept for a day or so in tin tanks, and then is drawn off to be bottled in the little, slim four-sided bottles which are such familiar objects in kitchen pantries.

Mangoest. The word mango is from manga, the Malay name for the mang tree, or Mangifera indica, of which there are a great many varieties, differing in the shape, size and flavor of the fruit.

The trees usually grow 40 to 50 feet high in the East and West Indies, something like chestnut trees, and are cultivated in most hot climates.

The fruits, mangoes, are of pear or kidney shape, resembling the plantain, orange colored, and almost covered with small black spots when ripe, and varying in size from a hen's egg to that of a goose. Each fruit contains a large flat stone, with a nutritious kernel inside.

Some kinds of mangoes are fibry and inferior, with a flavor of turpentine; but the best are very luscious, pulpy, and cut like apples.

The Origin of Sausage.—The sausage dates back to the year 897. It has been asserted that the Greeks in the days of Homer manufactured sausages, but this prehistoric mixture had nothing in common with our modern product.

The ancient so-called sausage was composed of the same materials which enter in the make-up of the boudin of the French market and the blood pudding of the French-Canadian. The ancient sausage was enveloped in the stomachs of goats. It was not until the tenth century that sausage made of hashed pork became known.

It was in or near the year 1500 that, thanks to the introduction into Germany of cinnamon and saffron, the sausages of Frankfort and Strasburg acquired a universal reputation.

SEVENTY-THREE ACCIDENTS

SUN PASTE STOVE POLISH IN TINS

Housekeepers injured, disfigured or burned to death by inflammable explosive liquid stove polishes, may be the cause of action at law against the dealer who supplied them. The "Law Students' Helper," published in Detroit, gave some attention to this subject in its issue for April, quoting authorities and court decisions. We have a record of seventy-three accidents from this cause since September 1, 1907, resulting in many horrible disfigurements and several deaths.

Urge the sale of our RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes, and our SUN PASTE in Tins, and keep on the safe side. Our goods are absolutely safe. Good profit in them, too.

FRESH FISH

This is a significant term when applied to canned fish—especially herring.

Unless the herring are freshly packed the flesh is dull in color, soggy in texture and without natural flavor.

Maconochie Bros.' factory for canning fish is the largest of its kind in the world. It has ample facilities for handling any "catch," however large. The fish are accordingly packed immediately upon arrival and are unquestionably fresh.

Maconochie Bros.' herring are accepted as standard the world over.

Re PEAS

Do you take the trouble to talk quality and grade? In quality there is only one thing to talk, viz., Canadian Canners' Brands.

To-day the Canadian Canners' Peas are the finest in the world. It takes years of experience and the most expensive modern machinery to turn out first quality Peas. The Canadian Canners have both.

Canned Peas are sold in four grades or qualities, viz.:

Grade 1.—Extra Fine Sifted Peas
" 2.—Sweet Wrinkle "
" 3.—Early June "
" 4.—Standard "

Our Grade 2 or Sweet Wrinkle Pea is the most satisfactory Pea packed. It costs very little more than the Standard No. 4 Pea, but on account of its superior quality you can sell it with a much larger margin of profit.

Push Sweet Wrinkle No. 2 Peas

Talk Quality in Peas. It Pays

Are Your Sales of Canned Goods on the Increase?

You may be a very pushful salesman. Your store may be inviting in its equipment. Your clerks may be first-class men. But unless your canned goods are really first-class quality it's mighty hard work to keep sales up to the mark. Let us suggest this remedy. Try

OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND

The grocers who sell most canned goods are those who deal exclusively in Old Homestead Brand. The reason is, that Old Homestead Brand is so uniformly excellent that it tickles the public appetite. Customers never find anything to complain about. Instead, the quality of every can excites their unstinted praise. We have attained this eminence by the exclusive use of only the best, full flavored fruits and vegetables obtainable, and by the use of up-to-date, sanitary, progressive canning methods.

Ask Your Jobber for Old Homestead Brand.
If he's a leading jobber, he carries it.

LEA'S

The Pickle with the Home-made Flavor

When we say to you that we manufacture Pickles, we do not mean that we are the only firm in Canada Manufacturing Pickles, but that we are the only firm that are Manufacturing Pickles that have the Home-Made Flavor, the recipes of a woman who has spent her lifetime in perfecting them, our goods have not that Factory flavor so detrimental to all goods that endeavor to take the place of the kind that your Mother made. This is one point that we keep constantly before us, that the consumer to-day demands that the goods that they consume shall be as near as possible to the flavor that you think can be produced only in your own kitchen. This is the flavor that we manufacture, and that only.

Profitable Goods

Are the goods that are a little better than the others: goods that will make sales where the others won't. Ozo Brand Pickles are good pickles, and show their quality. We have special facilities for turning out the best pickles, and we have made the most of them. For instance, we provide the seed from which the vegetables are grown and so get the best from the start; the cucumbers go straight from the vine to the factory, so that none of the fresh crispness is lost. We make our own vinegar and it cannot be beaten for pickling purposes. It will certainly pay you to specify that you want our goods when ordering pickles.

What the Canadian Trade is Doing

A Few of the Pleasant Things Said About the Recent Special Number—News of the Grocery Trade in the Various Towns in Canada From the Atlantic to the Pacific.

BARRIE.

June 2.—The fine weather which has been prevailing here for the last three weeks is beginning to tell with the merchants. When asked how business is, they smile and say, very good. Already several summer visitors have taken to their summer homes down the bay. "The weather, too has provided for some rapid strides in the growth of the surrounding district, making it about two weeks earlier than last year," said a local fruit grower, "and my strawberries, which were just beginning to show signs of blossom last year, are now forming fruit."

The stock of groceries of E. R. Wainwright, who assigned some five weeks ago, is being offered for sale privately. Thomas Turner is in charge.

M. H. Hypson, one of our old grocery boys, joined the staff of travelers for Kinnear & Co., Toronto, this week. We wish him all kinds of success.

Wm. McFadden, late of Tuck, Wisdome & Co., Sixth Ward, has opened an ice cream and confectionery store in the same ward, a business which has long been needed, and he should do well there.

The farmer who has worn that sunny smile as he brought his produce into town and sold it since the first of the year for 25c to 35c for butter, got a rude jolt on Saturday last, when he had to go home with a 15c ticket. The fine grass for pasture and the cheese factories not operating yet is the cause. Merchants do not see any outlook for butter to go lower, as the majority of the farmers will now pack, and in a few weeks the cheese factories will open and the prices will once more soar.

CHATHAM.

June 2.—Merchants universally report that May has been a first-class month, and the general feeling is optimistic. Crops throughout all parts of the country are in excellent shape, and the prospect of a bumper crop in the fall has led the farmers to spend more freely than during the winter. The outlook is bright.

Reports from various parts of the county indicate that the bean crop is looking good. In most places the plants are several inches high, and are much earlier than in former years.

T. B. Escott, the London wholesale grocer, formerly of this city, visited old friends near Dresden the early part of last week. On Victoria Day he officiated at the corner-stone laying of the Dawn Mills Methodist church.

Jas. N. Massey, grocer, who last January headed the polls for alderman, has purchased the wholesale liquor business of W. D. Sheldon. He took possession June 1. Mr. Massey is conducting a bargain sale with a view to reducing his grocery stock.

The Maple City Creamery put on a handsome new delivery wagon last week.

Miss May Taylor, daughter of J. P. Taylor, the Park Street grocer, leaves this week for London, where she will enter Victoria hospital as a nurse-in-training.

A noticeable feature of the grocery and allied trades during the past spring has been the number of merchants who handled flowers as a side line. Most of these were just taking advantage of the Easter trade. McGeachy's City Dairy have, however, taken the downtown agency for W. McKenzie Ross & Sons' nurseries.

A large factor in inducing better times will be the Drader box factory, which commences operations this week. The concern has a capacity of 2,000 boxes daily, with orders ahead for 200,000, and will employ from 35 to 40 hands.

An important business change took place last week when Fred. Wood, Grand Avenue, disposed of his grocery business to James Henry Kadwell. Mr. Wood has been in business here for 20 years past, and has always enjoyed a liberal patronage. He was conspicuous in the matter of early closing, an unusual thing for a grocer off the main street. The new proprietor, Mr. Kadwell, recently came out from the Old Country. He hails from Bow, East London, and is an experienced grocer. Mr. Wood's own plans are a little indefinite. Just now he expects to take a short rest, though it is understood he may shortly enter business elsewhere on a larger scale. Mr. Kadwell took possession on Thursday.

J. J. Keating, of Belle River, has sold his general store to Noah Parent, of the same place, the new proprietor to take possession July 1.

Geo. A. Young has been doing some extensive sampling with Sunny Monday soap, a full-size sample bar having been offered every lady in the Maple City. George has been busy handing out free samples for a couple of weeks past.

Leamington butchers have given notice that after June 1 they will sell meat for cash only. The announcement has been running in both Leaminton papers for the past month, so the general public should be ready for the change. A. B. Lounsbury and H. Rymal comprise the firms in the arrangement. The recent rise in the price of meats makes either higher retail prices or strictly cash terms absolutely necessary.

WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT US.

Here are a few of the pleasant things that have been said about the special spring and export number issued two weeks ago. These comments are from regular readers:

"We wish to congratulate you on your spring number, it is certainly an improvement on any special number yet gotten up.—R. R. B. Barrie.

"The export issue of The Grocer is worth the whole year's subscription. It is brimful of useful and valuable information and should be read from cover to cover by every clerk and employer in the land. The picture on the front is suggestive of the hungering of other countries for Canada's chief product, wheat."—J. G., Kingston.

"A regular subscriber to The Grocer gave as his excuse for being one hour and a half late in geting down to business last Saturday morning that he got up at 4.30 a.m. and saw it was too early to get up so laid down again to read for awhile at the special number of The Grocer and was so interested that he did not heed the time till he was that much late. We had to excuse him."—W. M., Guelph.

ST. CATHARINES.

June 2.—The prospects for a bountiful harvest are of a pleasing nature. Though the spring weather was not favorable for a time, the aftertime has made up for the lateness. The autumn-sown wheat is growing finely, there will be an extra supply of hay, the strawberry crop will be the heaviest for many years and the early varieties will be ready to gather in a week or ten days, and will be larger than usual owing to the alternate rains. The apple crop will be much larger than usual, and as for raspberries, gooseberries, cherries, these and all kinds of fruit will be greater in quantity than in any recent year. The farmers and fruit growers inform your correspondent that this seems to be the most promising of recent years.

The canneries have begun operations and are working on rhubarb and other early vegetables. The canners claim they will be a good many thousands of dollars out of pocket when the tomato season comes, as a great acreage of tomato plants have been set, and if the yield is as prophecied canned goods must take a drop in price.

Mrs. Margaret Cameron has disposed of her stock of goods and store in Niagara Street to Mrs. Edwin Moore, who, with her husband, conducted a grocery store on St. Paul Street some years ago. Mrs. Cameron retires into private life.

John Beal has sold his grocery business at the corner of Queenston and Thorold Streets, to Mr. Burtch, who comes from Tonowanda, N.Y., though he was a native of Louth township about six miles from St. Catharines, and he was absent from this section for about eighteen years. Mr. Burtch is well known to most of the older St. Catharines people, with whom he had business relations in the earlier days.

Mr. Pearson, grocer, at the junction of Niagara Street and Welland Avenue, has erected an addition to his building and has otherwise improved his premises. Mr. Pearson is the successor to Wm. Carty, the latter having accepted a position on the Welland canal.

KINGSTON.

June 24.—With the advent of summer Kingston looks charmingly beautiful in her green attire with lilac and apple blossom trimmings. What sound is that I hear? Why the waves of Lake Ontario as they beat along the shore. And those strains of music? Why, excursion boats landing for a few hours before continuing their course down among the famous 1000 Islands.

The wholesale and retail sections of the Board of Trade held a meeting lately and discussed the bill of lading question and also the question of freight rate discrimination against Kingston. Magistrate J. M. Farrel was elected to go to Toronto to attend a meeting of representatives regarding a new bill of lading.

The boat service on the lakes here have advanced rates on produce coming from the Islands and the Islanders feel sore over the matter and the only remedy is to get control of a boat and run it themselves, the same as the Wolfe Islanders did. The Wolfe Islander, built by Toronto parties, is giving good satisfaction doing this work.

Jim Crawford has put in a cheese cutter and is pleased with it. He feels it will pay for itself in a short time. It prevents waste and nibbling. It cost a lot in the first place but you have to pay for brains. Jim is a strong advocate of early-closing and recommends closing at 5 o'clock during July and August. This he feels would be better than a Wednesday afternoon break in the week. Medicine is better in small doses. Afternoons are hot and more enjoyment comes from 5 o'clock on. Two or more clerks with a petition could secure this desirable change. Who is willing to go around? I would suggest two or three lady clerks. They would be sure of success.

Geo. Crawford, late of Crawford Bros., grocers, has bought out the Gould Broom factory and expects to make a clean sweep. George is one to be depended on for giving good value. He looked for it in the retail business and knows how to sympathize and do things up to the handle. He will likely have his ad. in The Canadian Grocer, the golden gateway in the world's great channel for trade.

The sugar market is about as hard to figure on as the weather. Price is up and down like the thermometer. You are told that raws are up in New York and perhaps next day Montreal drops 10 cents. Yes it is a big puzzle. Buy as you go is as good a rule in the long run as any, but we don't follow the principle.

Edward Anderson, of Anderson Bros., grocers, is in very poor health just now. He is of sterling character and a favorite and I hope his recovery may be rapid.

A grocer on the market said recently, "I have been running a store on the credit principle for 20 years and I am disgusted. I am going to start in on the cash basis, do less business and make more money and escape a lot of worry and book-keeping." It's never too late to mend. The credit business often makes enemies. The shoe dealers cut it out and they are a happy lot and there is no reason why grocers shouldn't act as a body and sell for cash. If five or six leading grocers arranged to begin the rest would fall into line. Some local grocers are getting bald and grey, fretted nd worried and what does it all amount to? Sometimes a big bank account and a wrecked body and so on till the bugle calls all in.

June 1.—The feature in the grocery trade the past week has been the advance of ten cents in the price of sugar, which brings it back to where it was before the drop of the week previous. The market continues firm, as does that for teas, coffees and other staples.

Wholesale trade shows improvement, and the outlook is considered most favorable. Retail trade is also a little better. The appearance of early vegetables in goodly quantity is held responsible for a lowering by some dealers of the price of canned goods. Corn and peas may now be bought at three cans for a quarter and tomatoes at ten cents straight. There is a good demand for provisions of all kinds. Butter and eggs continue to decline in price while pork keeps high.

The retail grocers are looking forward to a big time on the occasion of the excursion to Detroit on the 17th inst. It is no secret that London grocerymen as a class, are ardent admirers of the game of baseball, a fact which is largely responsible for the place and date chosen for the outing, as at Detroit on the 17th an American League game is to be played. This will certainly be the chief attraction to Londoners, while for people otherwise inclined special arrangements have been made with the managements of the various parks and places of amusement, for which the city of the straits is so famous.

The chairman of the city board of license commissioners is given as authority for the statement that certain local grocers have of late been selling liquor regularly and systematically. It is said that vinegar jars and such like receptacles are found to render the delivery of liquor a comparatively safe and easy task. "We are watching them," says the chairman, "and will attend to them one of these days."

The fruit prospects hereabouts are said to be better than in many years. Apple trees have been in blossom for some time and on the early varieties the fruit is already forming. Strawberries are coming forward and in the course of a few days the market will be glutted with them. Of course when the quantity is large prices are sure to be low. The grain and other crops are all doing nicely and with the copious rains we have had of late the harvest should be the best in years. Everybod is most optimistic and the farmers ar more than pleased with conditions.

London grocers will enjoy their first weekly half holiday on Wednesday of this week.

MONTREAL.

June 5.—The grocery trade on the whole has been somewhat brighter during the week and perhaps this can be accounted for by the fact that people have had a holiday and many are preparing to leave for the country. These conditions are generally accompanied by an impetus to trade. Many people when they are leaving for the country will stock up generously lest some delicacy of which they are particularly fond may not be obtainable near their country domicile.

The custom of displaying certain lines of groceries on the sidewalk seems to be open to criticism. Perhaps it should be said that the custom would not be a bad one if the character of the display were right. A few days ago a festive wind on one of the side streets might have been observed depositing a generous coating of dust on some strawberries at a grocer's door. If canned goods, or something which could have been thoroughly cleaned, had been there instead of the strawberries, it would have been better for the people who bought the fruit. At another store and on another side street, this difficulty was completely obviated by a series of glass cases which were properly ventilated, and in these was a fine display of fruits and other lines well exposed to the public but perfectly safe from the microbe-laden clouds of dust which at times sweep up and down a street.

A machine which is somewhat unique, as it is said to be the only one of its particular kind in Canada is the electrically driven coffee roaster, of the Castle Blend Tea Co., on St. Catherine St. These people do an exclusive tea and coffee trade, and in addition operate a very nice tea room. This store is at the corner of two streets and it gets a generous amount of sunlight, which is always a welcome feature in a store. The tea room is furnished with simple but elegant furniture and the mural decorations display the same tendencies. Altogether a person feels that they are amidst bright surroundings.

Among the particularly pleasing window displays noticeable this week are: John Robertson's Spratt's Dog Biscuits; Walter Paul's branch, University St., Magi Caledonia Water, and Fraser Viger's pineapple window.

Scroggies have a novel feature in their grocery department this week, which consists of a demonstration of canned meats in a log camp, which is quite suggestive of the good old summer time and all the requisites for an enjoyable outing. So far as things to eat are concerned.

In cities especially, where space is more valuable than in the country, the problem is always a perplexing one where to put the stock, and any new scheme which economizes space is a welcome one. In a small grocery in a secluded part of this city may be observed a nice idea for the display of onions, oranges, potatoes, or anything of this nature. It consists of a bank of pockets, each one nearer the bottom and more to the front than its neighbor above. Considerable space is saved and a fine display is made, to say nothing of the convenience of the arrangement. This grocer states that it may be arranged in the shape of a pyramid with very good effect.

A very good idea was suggested and I may say it is carried into effect by this grocer, which is to have everything free of the floor. He said that boxes and various other cases which were placed on the floor always collected a certain amount of dirt under and between them. This man has a low bench about eight inches from the floor, and supported by small pillars and the goods are kept clear of the floor. It is quite easy to get in under this with a broom, so that the entire surface of the floor can be kept clean.

INGERSOLL.

June 2.—On Monday last, when Victoria Day was celebrated here in a fitting manner, some of the grocers kept their stores open for a few hours in the morning. Owing to the hundreds of visitors that were expected, the grocers believed that by keeping their stores open for a short time they would be affording a much-desired accommodation, which doubtless proved to be the case in many instances. There was an immense crowd in town, many visitors dropping in on friends or relatives unexpectedly, thereby creating a demand for an additional supply of table requisites. There was absolutely nothing selfish or disloyal about the course followed by the grocers, and the fact of their stores being accessible on the holiday was appreciated by many who found it necessary to make last minute purchases. Then in addition to the convenience to the public the heavy Saturday night rush, preceding a holiday was lessened materially, much to the satisfaction of employers and employes, who appreciate the turning of the key in the door before Sunday morning.

Indications point to a bountiful supply of small fruits during the coming season. The plum and cherry trees never gave greater promise of a heavy yield than at the present time. The trees have been laden with blossom, while in some instances where the fruit has commenced to form, it is very plentiful. This is particularly true of the earlier variety of plums. This state of affairs may not be exactly in accord with the usually accepted conditions governing fruit crops, but seeing is believing. Many people hold firmly to the opinion that the crops are only large every other year. Last year was one of the most successful plum seasons in a long period, but despite this fact the conditions this year are equally promising. Reports from surrounding districts are to the effect that there also will be a splendid crop of all varieties of berries. Under the wet weather of the past few weeks the berry bushes have thrived, and with seasonable weather from now on a large yield is assured. The early strawberries usually make their appearance about the first or second week in June and they are being anxiously awaited by those who at the present time are paying fifteen cents per box for the imported ones.

Butter at 20 cents per pound was the unusual feature of Saturday's market. This was a tremendous drop from 30 and 35 cents, which have been the ruling figures for the past few months, and those who happened along at the opportune time did not hesitate to stock up. The decline in price, however, was not necessitated by a glut, although there was a plentiful supply, but on account of the warm weather. When the market first opened, many sales were made at 28 cents, and a few at 25 cents. The vendors who did not market their supply early soon realized that it was being affected by the heat, in fact some of it was losing its firmness so rapidly that they considered the wisest course was to sell out at a sacrifice. Throughout the market building the word flashed that the price had been dropped to 20 cents and it was only a few minutes before all the baskets had been depleted. Purchasers, and especially those with refrigerators, congratulated themselves on their good fortune, as they felt that for once they had got butter at about its real value.

C. H. Crawford, who for nearly four years has conducted a most successful flour and feed business, has sold out to Grieves & Daniels, of this town, who took possession this week. It is understood that Mr. Crawford will shortly go on the road for one of Canada's largest seed firms, in which capacity he will make the acquaintance of many grocers. He is well adapted for the work and his geniality will doubtless win him friends wherever he goes.

At the Victoria Day celebration the prize for the oldest Scotch lady on the grounds was won by Mrs. James Murdock, who at the advanced age of 94 years is comparatively hale and hearty. The prize was five pounds of tea, donated by L. C. Menhennick.

Splendid progress is being made with the work of rebuilding the Manchester Cereal Mill, which was recently destroyed by fire.

Since the egg buyers commenced their trips through the country the prices have shown a slight upward tendency. At the market on Saturday they ranged from 15 to 17 cents per dozen.

On Thursday a large plate glass window in S. M. Fleet's grocery store and two china dinner sets which were on display, were broken, the accident being a most unusual one. When a farmer was driving past the store, his horse took fright and bolted, falling on the sidewalk. The animal quickly turned turtle and poked its feet through the window with the result mentioned above. The window was valued at $55 and was insured.

COMPLIMENTS FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

A letter received this week from a member of the grocery trade in Cape Town, South Africa bears some complimentary remarks which were very welcome. The letter opens as follows:

Cape Town, South Africa,
April 9.

"Editor Canadian Grocer,—As an appreciation of your valuable journal, which is handed round for perusal each week. it has occurred to me that you might like to know that your bright ideas and optimistic opinions are eagerly read here, where, perhaps, more than in most countries, we require a polishing up of ideas and an antidote to a rampant pessimism."

The writer of the above letter has also forwarded several photographs of South African stores, which compare very favorably with anything to be seen in Canada. Several of these will be reproduced in these columns in due time.

PETERBORO.

June 2.—The burning of Peterboro Cereal Co.'s mill, in which the Canada Flakes Co. manufactured their product, gives rise to a serious problem among those grocerymen who sell that class of breakfast food. The mill caught fire on Sunday night, May 31st, and before the blaze was extinguished the mill proper, a storehouse and packing room adjoining it were almost completely destroyed, and a large quantity of the wheat in the elevator damaged by water. All the machinery in the mill was rendered absolutely useless. The loss involved is estimated at $80,000. The damage is so great that it will be at least six months before business can be resumed, so that long before that time the wholesalers, or the majority of them, will have disposed of their stock.

J. T. Braund, general merchant, is enlarging his general store premises. The rapid increase in business during the last few years makes this necessary. He is putting in a stock of furniture upstairs and moving the flour and feed department to make room for store extensions.

A new general store has been opened by James McMartin in Cold Springs, a southern suburb of the city. The store is about a mile from the city limits and the business—all country trade—is on the increase. Mr. McMartin has secured a post office, which will be known as "McMartinville."

Gardeners report that the strawberry crop in the vicinity of Peterboro will be unusually good this year on account of the abundance of rain. The plants are in a very healthy and robust condition.

The death occurred in Brockville last week of George Sanderson, a former groceryman in Peterboro. He ran a corner grocery here for years. His wife predeceased him by exactly one month.

May 29.—British Columbia merchants are heartily joining in the movement to curtail credit. This has been rendered necessary by the demand for money and those who have large debts on their books are forced against the walls unless they have large capital or good backing. Large capital in these days of competition is possessed by very few in the grocery business, outside of that invested in stocks, and now that recovery is only being made from a financial stringency, backing is not always available. Wholesalers are pressing for prompt payment, and the obligations to them have to be met since they have control. It is not fair that the retailer, especially the smaller man, should be forced to the wall through negligence to pay on the part of consumers. In a city, especially, where amusements are to be had on all sides and where there is more "style" to be kept up among the women folk, ready cash at the end of the week or month very often goes to buy luxuries, or at least something that is not altogether necessary. Cash is paid for these every time, and the grocer and the butcher is allowed to wait, simply because he has been in the habit of it. There is no reason why the cash system will not work, after it is once gotten into full swing. It only means adjustment of available finances on the part of the customer. Eventually, the system works out to the better advantage of all concerned, to say nothing of the mutual better feeling which is promoted. The action of the Vancouver grocers was noted previously, and since then those in New Westminster and Chilliwack have followed suit. Fifteen days, the same period allowed by commission merchants to the retailer, is given by the retailer to the customer in New Westminster, so that the time is reasonable. In Chilliwack, straight cash is the slogan. There, the dairying, which is the leading industry, is on a cash bass, monthly cheques being issued to the patrons; hay, grain, livestock and produce are exchanged as cash and sold for cash, and the fruit-grower gets cash for his product so things should go all right. Retailers in Chilliwack have signed an agreement to sell for cash only and have given bonds for $50 each to carry it out.

Organization of the Chilliwack branch of the B.C. Retail Merchants' Association has just been completed with the following officers: George H. W. Ashwell, president; B. T. Malcolm, first vice-president; H. H. Gervan, second vice-president, W. L. McLean; secretary-treasurer; R. J. McIntosh, F. W. Renworth, James Munro, W. J. Lillie and T. H. Henderson, executive committee. The annual meeting will be held in October.

The British Columbia Wholesale Grocers' Association held its annual meeting in Victoria last week, and elected the following officers: President, H. H. Cooper, of A. Macdonald & Co., Vancouver; vice-president, Simon Leiser, of Simon Leiser & Co., Victoria; treasurer, Percy Wollaston, Victoria; joint secretaries, F. Elworthy, Victoria, and J. N. Ellis, Vancouver. The association consists of six Vancouver firms; namely, the W. H. Malkin Co., Kelly, Douglas & Co., W. J. McMillan & Co., A. Macdonald & Co., E. W. Leeson & Co. and the Hudson's Bay Co.; five Victoria firms; namely, Wilson Bros., R. P. Rithet & Co., Simon Leiser & Co., Hudson's Bay Company, and J. H. Todd & Co., and one Fernie firm, Western Canada Wholesale Company.

Contracts for supplies for the contractors of G.T.P. construction at Prince Rupert are being made locally, though there is no considerable distribution of orders. With camp supplies secured in Vancouver, there should be a large trade during the coming summer; in fact, it should be a principal feature in the business. With two or three thousand extra men to be cared for, the consumption of provisions should be large.

The local market this week has few outstanding features. A carload of condensed milk and cream arrived, which will relieve the situation, but not for long. Demand from camps in the interior and the north is taking up any surplus.

C. Nettle has taken over the Mount Pleasant confectionery store, located at 2440 Westminster Ave. He purchased it from W. J. Mann, who retained it only a few days after buying it from Gibson & Walker.

Samuel Sea, one of the pioneer merchants of Victoria, was in the city this week on his way to England, accompanied by his wife. They will spend the summer months abroad. Not only is Mr. Sea a pioneer merchant, but he is also British Columbia's oldest "Son of England."

HAMILTON.

June 2.—This has been a great week for the grocers who interest themselves in politics. The grocers are mostly in the know as to how their neighbors vote and the canvasser is out with the glad hand for the corner man, who has politics down to a fine point. The average grocer is quite a diplomat, while as a rule he is very strong for his party. He has to be very careful about giving offense to the other side They have been a great help in rounding up the foreigners, getting them naturalized and registered. Hamilton has a great number of foreigners and the securing of their votes cuts quite a figure in the results. The excitement is at high water-mark and everybody will be glad when the polls close on Monday night. It is to be hoped that we may have a good, honest government whichever side wins.

Things are looking brighter from a business standpoint. Factories are resuming operations and the glad smile is coming back to everybody. The crops in this section are the finest ever, and if we meet with no drawbacks later on the farmers will have need to rejoice over the copious showers of May.

Pineapples are selling better this year than usual, and the quality is very fine.

The grocers' association is making extensive arrangements for its annual picnic, which promises, under the management of President Forth to be better than ever.

Brantford retailers are co-operating with the local body to make the outing a huge success.

GUELPH.

June 2.—Benson Bros. have now completed their extensive improvements, and, with the new fittings have undoubtedly a fine store.

Jackson & Son have enlarged their window space and also their inside department by taking the store lately occupied by Harding Bros. The window is antique and will draw a good deal of attention, but this firm do not believe in fancy fixtures. Good honest value for your money and no fancy fixtures is what they believe in.

Saturday's market was not brisk at all, and no doubt the unfavorable state of Wyndham Street had something to do with it. The downtown grocer is certainly up against it at present. The rich pasture has had its effect on the butter supply, both in quality and quantity, and the result was that the price dropped to 17c a lb. Eggs also took a tumble to 14c; potatoes 80c a bag. There was a good supply of greens at the usual prices.

It is good to be an outside grocer here at present, as the farmers will not go on the main street with their produce, and the outside stores are kept busy every day now.

Does it pay a grocer to have his own brand of soap? I saw a grocer the other day getting ready to put in a window of soap, and it was his own brand. He had a nice long bar and was going to show by balancing two of his bars against six bars of a standard make how big value his was. When it came to the test the six bars had him beaten and also paid for their own advertising. That window did not go in.

Guelph has now a new fish store started and it seems to do a good business.

The grocery clerks are all decided to elect the three candidates in South Wellington, as the whole three have promised to give us eight hours' work, eight hours' play and eight hours' sleep for everybody, which means in the grocery business in Guelph about 20 or 22 hours less than we have at present. If promises at election-time were any good the grocery business would be the brightest attraction for some young men.

Doesn't it make you tired after a hard day's work behind the counter to see, just as you are ready to close up some nice fellow with a pet hobby coming in to tell you all about it. Travelers also do not use good judgment in making it a point to arrive at a man's place of business when he is ready to go to his home.

Jas. Anderson has received a letter from H. Walker, of H. Walker & Son, announcing his safe arrival in Glasgow after a very pleasant journey.

Mr. Hudson, of the Canada Brokerage Co., Toronto, with his family, came up by automobile and spent the holiday in Guelph combining business with pleasure.

The damp weather has had its effect on the granulated sugar in bags, and a good many grocers and customers also are complaining.

AVOID FAKE ADVERTISING.

This is the time of the year when many annual publications are being gotten out nominally in the interests of transportation companies and other big concerns. They are usually called an "Official Guide" and claim to be issued under the authority of the president or general manager. The canvassers approach firms who supply or want to supply these corporations with products of one kind or another, and they hint that it is very much in the interest of the firm that they should advertise in this Guide, otherwise, they hint it may affect their business with the corporation.

A couple of years ago a letter was carried by one of these canvassers alleged to be signed by President Hays of the Grand Trunk Railway, which was proved to be a forgery. There is another official guide now being prepared in the interests of one of the big railways and claimed to be issued under the authority of the head of the road. A letter has been received from him which states distinctly that his corporation has nothing whatever to do with the publication. The book is issued entirely as a private enterprise and the giving or withholding of an advertisement will neither help nor hurt any one who has business to transact with the corporation.

When business men are approached by canvassers from publications of this sort, which they believe to be a fake, and most of them are, they should positively refuse to place any business and should write at once to the head of the corporation and get his assurance that the statements made by the canvassers are correct. Certain big firms have been doing this, and in few, if any, cases have they found the statements verified.

ESTABLISHING TRANSPORTATION BUREAU.

The council of the Montreal Board of Trade are energetically pushing forward the establishment of a transportation bureau. The need of such an organization is generally admitted. It is not intended by the establishment of this bureau to antagonize the railway interests, but rather that the bureau should cooperate with them. The question of freight charges is a vital one in Montreal. With the centre of consumption of material moving gradually west, the increased freight charges on goods shipped places Montreal at a disadvantage in comparison with western cities. The duties of the transportation bureau will be to conserve Montreal's interests as a distributing point; to be represented at meetings of the Railway Commission; to facilitate adjustments through overcharges, delays, etc., and generally to advise members. One hundred and twenty members of the board have subscribed to the bureau, but the council want a larger membership than this before they see their way clear to go on with the project, and are appealing for further support.

KEEP BUSY.

During the summer months more than at any other season of the year there is an inclination on the part of the grocer to take things easy. When summer dullness has set in and business seems dead merchants are tempted to let matters take their course without trying to make trade. More than one grocer will admit that he makes no special endeavor to attract trade during the summer months. From long custom he has grown accustomed to take the quietness of the summer as something inevitable, and he makes no effort to turn what he terms the dull season into a satisfactory period. Clerks are allowed to sit around, as indeed does the proprietor himself very often; possibly tourist trade is not cultivated, or if so, in an extremely desultory manner, and business system generally is allowed to relax. Instead of making every effort to attract trade, the proprietor takes it for granted that trade must be small—that the situation cannot be improved. The key note to the whole thing is industry. Ask your clerks for suggestions; do some thinking yourself, and then let everybody get busy. There is business obtainable if only it is sought after. Try it this coming summer and see if there is not some truth in the foregoing.

HIDE AND SEEK IN SUGAR.

The decline of 10 cents on Canadian refined sugars, which was commented on as rather surprising last week, did not last long and the market is up again on its former basis.

With the general condition of the sugar markets the decline was unwarranted and seems to have been a piece of speculation among Canadian refiners. The world's raw markets, which for a few days showed signs of easiness, are firm again and with less encouraging reports again from that important centre, Cuba, where it is said that not more than 25,000 tons may still be made, and a quick recovery in European beet markets the general situation is now very strong. While we hesitate to prophecy after the hit and miss changes of the last two weeks, all reputable reports seem to point to still firmer conditions as the season of greatest demand approaches.

THE QUEBEC GUILD MEETING.

An interesting time is promised those who attend the annual meeting of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild, which takes place in Quebec on June 17 and 18.

Already the programme has been prepared and there is a treat in store for the grocers.

"The Importance of Trade Associations and Their Relations with the Government," is the subject of a paper to be read by the president, H. C. Beckett, Hamilton. This is the same paper as was read by Mr. Beckett at the meeting of the Ontario Wholesale Grocers' Guild, and which received such favorable comment at the time.

The address of P. Wollaston, of Vancouver, on "The Cost of Doing Business," is likely to be full of possibilities in the way of live discussion, while the paper promised by Wm. C. Cross, St. John N.B., on "The Credit Man and His Work," will be no less interesting.

Then it is possible a couple of Montreal wholesalers and a Quebec man will read a paper each. Subjects have not yet been announced.

A representative of the Retail Merchants' Association will address the gathering on the effect of the co-operative bill presently before the House at Ottawa.

Subjects down for discussion include: The Wholesalers' Relations with Manufacturers; railway matters, such as the new bill of lading now before the Railway Commissioners, and other equally important matters.

It is likely that a few amendments will be made to the by-laws of the Guild.

DEATH OF W. C. ADAMS.

Few travelers in the grocery trade of Ontario are better known or more highly regarded than was W. C. Adams, late of Davidson, Hay, Toronto, who died very suddenly at his home, 201 Seaton Street, about 11.30 p.m. Sunday, May 31, aged 43 years. As one of the most successful travelers going out of Toronto, and by reason of his cheery and genial disposition, he will be greatly missed, not only by his firm and fellow-travelers, but also by a host of customers and friends up along the north shore and in New Ontario, who have learned to look for his regular visits.

About six weeks ago Mr. Adams had to leave his regular work and for some time was quite seriously ill from lung trouble. Last week, however, he was feeling a good deal better and was in Davidson, Hay's sample room on two or three different days, making the last visit on Saturday. He seemed fairly well, though he expected to take a month or so longer to recuperate, and was planning to spend that time at a farm he owns up in Dunchurch. Late Sunday evening he was seized with a hemmorhage and passed away very suddenly.

W. C. Adams was a son of Captain James Adams, also connected with Davidson. Hay. He was born at King, in Aberdeen county, Scotland, in 1865, and came to Canada with his parents in 1871. He attended the Toronto public schools and spent a year at Walkerton High school. Leaving school in 1882 he went to Chicago and took a position as entry clerk with Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. After two years he went to Reid, Murdock & Co., wholesale grocers, with whom he spent eleven years, five or six in minor positions. and then as a traveler with Iowa as his territory and headquarters in Des Moines. He remained till his death a member of the Des Moines Travelers' Association.

In 1897 he returned to Toronto and shortly afterward joined the traveling staff of Davidson & Hay. Since then, by his sterling qualities and high abilities as a salesman, he has won his way to the top and was one of the firm's most valued salesmen. He had a manner which seemed to particularly suit the customers in his territory and which won him remarkable success.

The funeral was held on Wednesday at three o'clock, from his home on Seaton Street to Mount Pleasant cemetery. The services was conducted by Rev. Dr. Perry, of Jarvis Street Baptist church, of which Mr. Adams had been an adherent for some years. Mrs. Adams and three young children survive.

CONGRATULATIONS. MR. CHARLES

Wm. Charles, who has been right-hand man for W. G. A. Lambe, Toronto, for some years, ought to be a pretty happy man this week for one or two reasons.

The first is explained in a circular dated June 1st, which was sent among the Ontario trade and which reads: "We have pleasure in announcing that Mr. Charles, who has taken a prominent part in the management of our business for several years past, has this day been admitted to partnership in the undersigned firm.—W. G. Lambe & Co."

The second reason is perhaps even greater, and is a happy event which took place in Saskatoon on Tuesday, June 2nd, when Mr. Charles was married to Miss Jennie Drysdale, a prominent young lady of that town, whose home was formerly in Goderich, Ont. Mr. Charles will, of course, bring his bride to Toronto, to rejoice with him in his new responsibilities.

FOUND A BRIDE IN EUROPE.

An interesting romance has developed from the trip to the Mediterranean which James Lumbers, sr., and L. O. Lumbers, of the James Lumbers Co., Toronto, have been enjoying for some months.

It seems that in the party with which the Toronto people traveled, was a family from Greensville, Indiana, which included an attractive young lady, Miss Helen Baker. Mr. L. O. Lumbers, with characteristic energy, fell in love with the young lady in question and the young people were quietly married in London on April 22nd.

Mr. James Lumbers returned home a couple of weeks ago. Mr. L. O. Lumbers and his bride are taking a further trip on the continent but will return shortly and make their home in Toronto.

ENJOYING THEMSELVES IN IRELAND.

According to letters received recently T. Kinnear, jr., of Kinnear & Co., and Frank Sloan, of John Sloan & Co., Toronto, who went off together on a trip through Great Britain about the middle of May, are having a glorious time in the "Auld Land."

They struck Ireland first visited Cork and Dublin and were at Killarney on May 23rd. They are going to take a run through Scotland and England, getting down to London in time for part of the Olympic games. They will be back home, full of stories of the trip, about July 1st. Both gentlemen have friends in various parts of the country and this is helping to make their visit enjoyable.

CHEVALIER GIANELLI PASSED AWAY.

The death of Chevalier Angelo M. F. Gianelli, who passed away at his residence of his son, Alfred H., 169 Empress Crescent, Toronto, on Thursday evening, May 28, is notable by reason of the fact that the deceased made very worthy and successful efforts to develop trade between Canada and his native country, Italy.

Chevalier Gianelli was born at Genoa in 1832, and was a graduate of the Collegio Nazionale of that city. He enlisted in the Sardinian army in 1852, and two years later volunteered as ensign in the first contingent for the Crimean war, receiving his discharge in 1856. Coming to Montreal in that year, he was in 1870 appointed Consul for Italy in the Province of Quebec. In 1874 the jurisdiction over Bonaventure, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia was added, and in 1877 Canada and Newfoundland were also placed under his Consulate.

He has done a great deal to encourage trade between Canada and Italy, his firm shipping the first cargo of Canadian-sawn pine to his native country. He was appointed Agent-General and Executive Commissioner for the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia, being at its close complimented and thanked by Baron Blanc and the Italian Government, and given a medal and an elaborate address by the exhibitors and employes in appreciation of his services and administrative capacity. The order of Knight of the Crown of Italy was conferred upon him by King Humbert on his resignation from the service of the Italian Government owing to pressure of private business.

He is survived by his wife, living in Toronto, four sons, Charles A. of New York; A. W. H., Louis F. and Victor E., and one daughter, Mrs. (Dr.) Harley Smith, of Toronto.

The funeral was held on Monday from Empress Crescent to the Church of the Holy Family and thence to Mount Hope cemetery, and was largely attended by consular representatives from Toronto and elsewhere.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Advanced.

Beans—Advanced.

Montreal, June 4.

Sugar has been occupying the centre of attraction for the past week by its early resumption of the price which ruled before the ten cent drop. Conjectures are abroad that this price will be maintained for sometime, as European market conditions seem to indicate this.

The Japan tea market has presented features which were not anticipated, according to the latest cable despatches from the Orient, and the opening price, which it has been thought would have been lower, and remained lower in comparison with last year, has firmed up. This condition is due to the comparatively small arrivals from the interior. At first the small quantities coming in was not thought serious, but now it has become apparent that a grave shortage of high grades exist. Some considerable trading has taken place in Ceylon blacks in local circles while other lines have remained much the same as at last report.

SUGAR—Following sharp on the New York advance of 10 cents on prices all around the Montreal producers advanced their prices, which, it is thought, will remain unchanged for some time, as the European market is easier and indications seem to point this way.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES—Demand for Barbadoes molasses is good. The sales of new crop are closed, the last sales being on a basis of 19c first cost, for choice grades and 21c first cost for secondary grades. This year's output is estimated to be 25 per cent. short of last year's. Foreign markets are easier, which is natural after sharp advances of last week. Syrups are normal.

TEA—The Japan market, according to the following advice from the East, is firming up considerably: "Although the opening price was about 5 per cent. lower than last year the actual operations at the time of our last report (9 inst.) on account of the small arrivals from the interior, were about on the same basis at corresponding time last season. Since then the shortage of high grades has become apparent, and prices during the past week or so firmed up a little."

Other reports state that the quantity is small and there is no anticipation of lower prices. Other lines are meeting with about equal demand, except perhaps, Ceylon blacks, which are falling off in quality and some good lines are now offering. Other lines are fairly quiet. Advices from London dated May 23 say: "First samples to London from the Indian market are green and thin, but considering they are first invoice they are better than usual. The general opinion is that the market will open high at Calcutta."

shippers, who are supplying the Chicago market.

EVAPORATED APPLES—The demand for evaporated apples is slightly better, as is the case with some other lines of dried fruits at this season. Prices are unchanged.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL—Each week the demand for canned vegetables is increasing. Canned fruits are also in very good demand. The request for canned fish is falling off, as the demand was appreciably slower last week. Meats are showing almost as much activity as the vegetable and fruit lines. Shere has been no change of prices since last week. New list prices are expected about June 10 and are awaited with interest. Those in a position to know something about them anticipate tomatoes selling at 90c, corn at 85c and peas from 70c to 75c. Whether these figures will rule or not remains to be seen.

TORONTO—There is considerable talk about new prices, but nothing definite as yet. Dealers here say they are in better shape than the Montreal jobbers, some of whom are said to have pretty heavy stocks. Business is a little brisker this week in all lines.

MANITOBA MARKETS

Conditions continue favorable and the outlook is considered excellent. There is an optimistic spirit abroad among the trade, but there is also a spirit of caution, and there is little disposition to discount the future by heavy buying on the strength of a crop not harvested. Business is active and prices are steady.

CANNED GOODS—There is not much activity in canned goods, the high prices having reduced the demand. Local houses are overstocked with some lines of fruit and vegetables.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Advanced and firm.

Beans—Very firm.

Dried Fruits—Better demand.

Toronto, June 4.

Wholesalers seem to be rather more optimistic in their reports this week and indications seem to point to the fact that business is improving. Travelers, who were the most pessimistic some weeks ago, are giving much more cheerful reports. It is thought that with the advent of the warm weather, and particularly with the splendid reports from all kind of crops coming in from all parts of the country, conditions are gradually improving.

Collections, too, are showing a slightly more favorable turn this week, all pointing to better business.

SUGAR—The decline noted last week was only temporary and the prices noted previously were resumed almost before the paper could reach its readers. This points to the sustaining of the strong market we have been writing of for some weeks. At present conditions are very firm with the likelihood of a continuance. Willett & Gray's last report says, regarding the situation:

"In Europe the downward reaction noted last week continued until 11s. was reached for beet sugar followed at the close by a rally to 11s. 4½d. with a firm market and increased demand for both raws and refined. As cane sugar sympathizes with the decline and the rally this week may mark the renewal of the upward trend to the general markets, particularly as it is understood that purchasing of beet root sugars by American refiners has been renewed to some extent.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES — Business continues fair at steady prices.

TEA—Trade continues quiet locally with no noteworthy features.

COFFEE—Dealers report local business encouraging with no new features.

DRIED FRUITS—Demand seems a little better this week, particularly for prunes and raisins. Prunes continue scarce. Some dealers report that they expect new California seeded raisins in directly and at a price considerably below the present basis.

RICE AND TAPIOCA—A staple business is being done at steady prices.

BEANS—The scarcity of beans in Canadian markets is sending prices up sky high. Local dealers seem to have some stock to work on and prices are scarcely so high as the situation seems to warrant.

DEATH OF MRS. FRANK EVERIST.

Passed Away Suddenly on Monday, June 1st.

The death of Mrs. Everist, wife of Frank Everist, of McWilliam & Everist, wholesale fruit merchants, Toronto, occurred on June 1. Up to two days before her death Mrs. Everist was apparently in good health. An abscess in the head rapidly developed and broke, causing death. The deceased lady was 53 years of age, and was a native of Wentworth County, Ontario. Besides her husband, Mrs. Everist is survived by four sons and three daughters, all residing in Toronto. The offices and warehouse of McWilliam & Everist were closed a couple of days this week, in consequence.

Welling & Rae, grocers, Vancouver, are succeeded by R. Y. Blackhall.

WAS A MASTER TRAVELER.

R. W. Ritchie Passed Away Last Week After a Useful Life as a Grocery Salesman.

A traveler among travelers, a man with high ideals who carried them out, a salesman of extraordinary ability who had mastered his business. Such was R. W. Ritchie, who passed away at his home in Orangeville on Thursday, May 28, aged 61 years.

Twenty-one years ago Mr. Ritchie severed his connection with the Wm. Ramsay Co., Toronto, with whom he had spent some time, and joined the traveling staff of Eby-Blain. He was placed on the territory from Toronto to Owen Sound, and since then he has covered that ground with perhaps as much success as comes to any traveler.

A man of principle, with high regard for both his customer and his firm, of a happy disposition and with a love for a clean joke, Mr. Ritchie made a host of firm friends who will mourn his death very sincerely.

Mr. Ritchie was a close student of teas and had possessed himself of a lot of information on this subject, which he used to good advantage. Many of his customers will remember how they used to trust his judgment in selling and what excellent satisfaction he gave them.

Of late years Mr. Ritchie had begun to feel the rigors of the traveler's life and about nine months ago he withdrew from Eby-Blain's and retired to his home in Orangeville, where he lived happily till his death.

Mrs. Ritchie and six children survive him. Fred, one of the sons, conducts a grocery store in Orangeville, and also one in Dundalk. Another son is in business in western Canada. The death of William, another son, a short time ago, was a very great shock to Mr. Ritchie, and probably hastened his own death.

The funeral on Saturday was very largely attended, not only by the townspeople, but also by a number of old customers, traveler friends and representatives from the Toronto trade. J. F. Eby and Hugh Blain, of Eby-Blain; Mr. Kyle, of Kyle & Hooper, and several others attended the funeral.

A TYPOGRAPHICAL ERROR.

In a letter from the Salada Tea Company, Toronto, published in these columns last week, in which some statements, made in the advertisement of another tea house in a former issue were questioned, and a challenge issued, a typographical error caused one paragraph to read in rather a misleading way. The sentence referred to appeared as follows: "Between the years 1896 and 1898 they had a record of growth for twelve years," etc. It should have read, "between the years 1896 and 1908,"

How this mistake could occur is inexplicable, but it is none the less regrettable.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Reading notices under this heading will be accepted at 10 cents per agate line.

L. Chaput Fils & Cie., Montreal, have just received a car of Oregon prunes, which they are offering at attractive figures. This news should interest the trade, in view of short crop prospects. They are also having a special sale of white wine vinegar in all-sized packages. They are sending out samples to those interested.

GOOD PROSPECTS IN ATLANTIC FISHERIES

Halifax Correspondent Tells of the Outlook for Fishing Season—Good Catches Will Benefit Business Generally.

Halifax, N.S., May 30.

With the fishing season opening well and the prospects excellent for good catches, the business outlook is most promising. Activity in the fisheries in this province adds greatly to business in general. The fishermen circulate money freely, and as a result, all branches of trade benefit. The early arrival of mackerel on the coast this season, and catches being made on the eastern and western shores, has caused considerable activity. The fish are of exceptionally fine quality, some weighing three and four pounds each, and a ready market is found.

Generally speaking, demand in the West Indies for fishstuffs, with the exception of alewives, has been good, considering the season of the year, and if it continues at the present rate, exporters along the waterfront will find their stocks exhausted long before the arrival of new supplies of Newfoundland cure in August.

Alewives have been moving very slowly, and spot stocks are sufficient to supply the demand for some months unless the unexpected happens. The catch of alewives at St. John so far this year has been far short of the average—in fact, a failure, the greater part being sold fresh for bait.

The first cargo of winter herring arrived this week from Bay of Islands, and found a ready sale at a fair price.

During the past week mackerel have been reported plentiful along the shore, and some fair stops made. The American seiners have returned from the south, and part of the fleet is now on the Cape Shore or the Nova Scotia coast. The Cape Shore fleet will probably number the same as last year, viz., 50 vessels. On May 22nd, the first arrivals at Boston of fresh mackerel from Nova Scotia sold at 27c each for large fish. Demand for fresh mackerel in the States this year is expected to be excellent, due in part to the small catch of the fleet on their southern cruise, the vessels having landed so far only 5,472 barrels, against 12,604 the same date last year.

For dry fish, the outlook for the bank and shore catch at present, points to a good spring fishery, and bankers are expected to average about 200 quintals more per vessel this year than last. One vessel, which arrived at Lunenburg a few days ago, stocked 1,400 quintals, besides selling about $1,000 worth of fresh halibut and haddock. If the weather for the next few weeks is favorable it is expected that a limited quantity of new cure will be offering about the latter part of June or early July.

Butter continues to drop in price and the receipts are increasing daily. Good creamery prints can now be bought for 27c, and small dairy tubs and rolls from 25c to 26c. A still further decrease in the price is looked for.

Eggs are in good supply, but the price holds very firm. Nova Scotia eggs are quoted at 18c, and Prince Edward Island at 17c.

A VISITOR FROM PATRAS.

American Vice-Consul Visits Canada in Interests of Currant Industry.

An interesting visitor to the Toronto trade this week was Howarth J. Woodley American Vice-Consul at Patras, who has been traveling through the United States and Canada in the interests of the Greek currant industry. Mr. Woodley was introduced to the trade by George Stanway, commission merchant, and made a pleasant call at The Grocer office.

"Yes, the industry is growing in importance in Greece," said Mr. Woodley, as may be seen from the fact that shipments last year showed an increase of 18,000 tons. They aggregated 132,000 tons as against 114,000 the year before.

"As yet," Mr. Woodley said, "the United States and Canada are not using so large a quantity of currants as they might, and as we hope they will shortly. Last year, for instance, 18,000 tons were disposed of in these two countries and this is much below the rate of consumption in England, Germany and elsewhere. Consumption in America, however, is showing an encouraging increase, as last year's imports were 2,500 tons greater than the preceding year."

"What is the Canadian consumption," he was asked.

"Practically all the currants used in Canada are shipped through United States ports," was the reply, "and in our returns the two countries are grouped together."

The increasing demand for currants throughout the world, Mr. Woodley says, is due to the propaganda carried on by the Greek currant syndicate. They have been advertising extensively in Great Britain and on the continent and have lately begun to carry out this policy in America.

Asked as to possibility to which the industry could be extended Mr. Woodley said: "Greece at present can grow a good deal more currants than the world demands. The average production is 150,000 tons annually. If the crop is above the demand the surplus is held and manufactured into pulp and into wines and spirits. While the crop will only grow satisfactorily on the west coast and the Ionian Islands, the possibilities of production have not as yet been reached."

"The organization of the currant syndicate has been of considerable advantage to the industry," says Mr. Woodley. "It has proved very effectual in putting it on a better basis, where reasonable prices can be commanded and has established a standard for different values. The industry is, of course, a natural monopoly in Patras as nowhere else does the fruit seeem to grow successfully. Experiments have been tried in California and Australia but without success. The Greek climate seems to be the only one perfectly suited for the ripening of the fruit."

This is Mr. Woodley's first visit to America, though he was born and educated in England and has seen a good deal of other parts of the world. He expressed himself as quite favorably impressed with Canada particularly as regards the West, where he went from Chicago. He left Toronto on Tuesday en route to Europe and after covering the markets in the large centres there will return to Patras.

Mr. Woodley has spent six years in Patras and represents the third generation of his family in the position he now occupies. He speaks in a very interesting and enthusiastic way of Greece and its people.

THE JAPANESE RICE CROP.

Growth of Population and Increased Consumption Makes Importations Necessary.

American Vice-Consul Walter Gassett, writing from Kobe, Japan, recently, says that the official return of the rice crop of 1907 for the Japanese perfecture of Hiogo (Kobe) is given as 10,586,014 bushels. He reviews the crop figures as follows:

The yield was slightly under the average for the four previous years, that of 1906 having been 10,890,524 bushels; 1905, 10,032.353 bushels; 1904, 10,975,170 bushels, and 1903, 10,513,194 bushels. The crop for the whole of the empire is given as 243,339,485 bushels, showing an increase of 5.9 per cent., as compared with the previous year, and of 11.8 per cent. as compared with an average yield. The crop is the largest since 1904.

This may be accounted for by a larger acreage and improved methods of cultivation, but the ratio of increase has not kept pace with the greater demand caused by the growth of the population and the increased consumption of rice among the poorer class of farmers, instead of millet and wheat, and it is estimated that 25,000,000 bushels will have to be imported to make up the deficiency.

The Canadian Aerated Water Co., of Montreal, has dissolved.

A. Rioux & Cie, general merchants, Amqui, Que., have assigned.

P. Z. Dube, general merchant, Amqui, Que,, is offering to compromise.

NEW BRUNSWICK FAVORS ONTARIO APPLES

Correspondent Says Nova Scotia is Losing Its Market Because of Improperly Marked Fruit—Ontario Shippers Are Gaining Firm Hold.

Special Correspondence to The Canadian Grocer.

St. John, N.B., May 30.—It is said that Nova Scotia fruit packers, because of dishonest marking of their apple barrels, have lost the confidence of buyers in St. John; that they have been sending only poor fruit and at the same time marking it No. 1; that in inspections made last summer from 70 to 80 per cent. of the Nova Scotia apples sent here were falsely marked; that shipments were not reliable, and that if a man wanted good apples it was best not to send him any Nova Scotian stock. As a result of this, dealers claim, Ontario fruit men have by honest dealing, captured the New Brunswick market.

Speaking of this matter to The Grocer representative the other day, one of the leading wholesale dealers here remarked that he did not expect to lay in one barrel of Nova Scotia apples next season. Besides himself, he said, there were several other dealers who would refuse to buy apples from the neighboring province. He intended to import all his apples from Ontario.

The reason for this, he said, was that the markings on the Nova Scotia barrels are now utterly unreliable. Sometimes dealers were fooled with apples from Ontario, but if the fruit was from a reputable packer, they were to be depended on in every instance. Last fall he had imported two carloads of winter apples from Nova Scotia, paying at the rate of $2.75 and $3 a barrel. When the fruit arrived in St. John he was compelled to sell at 75 cents a barrel. This was not on account of a sudden drop in the market, but because the bulk of the apples should never have been put in barrels at all.

It is sometimes asserted, he continued, that the reason they send poor apples to St. John, is that people here will not pay a good price for them. "Two weeks ago" the dealer continued, "I imported two carloads of Northern Spy apples from Ontario and I sold all the No. 1's for $5 a barrel and the No. 2's for $4 a barrel. That, I think, is sufficient answer to the charge that we are unwilling to pay good prices for good fruit."

Asked how long ago it was that the Nova Scotia markings were first found unreliable, the dealer said that the barrels were never marked as they ought to be, but the state of affairs is getting worse every year. He made some severe comments on the workings of the new Fruit Marks Act, and said he had come to the conclusion it was no good.

The Nova Scotia growers, he said, had simply cut themselves out of the best part of the business in the province, the winter fruit. "I have been handling an increasing quantity of Ontario apples every year," he concluded, "and will probably continue to do so, at least as long as the present state of affairs, in which 75 per cent. of Nova Scotia apples are falsely marked, holds good."

G. E. Chester Gandy, who was fruit marks inspector last year, said, in reply to the statement that 75 per cent. of the Nova Scotia apples that arrive here are falsely marked, that last year he did not think more than 25 per cent. could be so classified. Last year the fruit coming here he claimed, was better than ever before. The most of the apples from the sister province, he explained, go to Halifax and England, because the growers can realize a better price in the Old Country than they can here.

Business has been very good during the past week. There has been but a few changes in market prices. Molasses is up one cent a gallon, beans are quoted 10 cents a bushel higher and lard has advanced a quarter-cent. Seeds are pretty well cleaned up. There is no timothy to be had and only a few pounds of clover.

The harbor fishing has not been up to the mark this season. Gaspereaux have been fairly plentiful but shad are very scarce. Only a few salmon have been taken up to the present time.

TORONTO GROCER SUICIDES.

Geo. B. Link, who kept a grocery store at 954 Yonge St., Toronto, committed suicide on May 30 by throwing himself in the city reservoir. He left a note addressed to his wife and children bidding them good-bye and saying he had nothing more to live for. His wife says he had been more or less weak in his mind for some time past. He was about 50 years of age.

A DELICATE MATTER.

The following little letter, which appeared in a recent issue of the Hamilton Spectator, touches a matter which might well be commented upon, and which will be appreciated by a good many grocers:

To the Editor,—I want to say a few words to our city government on a delicate but important subject. You know that the grocery men get their fruit and vegetables out on the pavement, and you know that there are some pretty tall dogs. Now, you know what I want to say, and if you will help put it before our city government, you will help me out and do the public a great favor. What we want is vegetables on boxes or shelves above the high-water mark or inside the store. These wire screens they use over baskets are not waterproof, This is a delicate matter, but one the grocery men should attend to, because you know when people go to the store for cabbages and beets, they do not want to be obliged to take peas also.

CLEANLINESS.

TO INCREASE CURRANT CONSUMPTION.

The Greek currant syndicate, in order to increase the general consumption of currants, has begun advertising the merits of currants throughout different countries.

The first of these advertisements appeared in the May number of one of the women's magazines, and was as follows:

> Ask your Baker for
> CURRANT BREAD,
> Wholesome—Nutritious—Palatable.
> NOTE:—When buying Currants for home use insist on getting fresh goods.

Behind such advertising so general and indirect as this, there must truly be great faith. Currant bread is an ordinary thing—any baker can bake it. The idea of this advertisement is that contractors will demand currant bread of their bakers, who, to fill those demands, will be obliged to use currants. The "note" at the bottom is also destined to increase the consumption, by compelling grocers to keep a fresh stock. It would seem like a far cry to the time when advertising so indefinite as this could show an increase in the amount of currants consumed in this country.—The Grocery World.

PERSONAL NOTES.

Wm. R. Cummings, Cumming's Bridge, Ottawa, paid a call on The Grocer during his visit to Toronto last week.

J. G. Gordon, traveling representative of Maclure & Langley, Toronto, has just returned from a three months' trip to Europe.

J. L. Bathgate, of Scott, Bathgate & Co. Winnipeg, was a visitor to Toronto last week.

S. M. Ewing, of S. H. Ewing & Son, Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto last week, among the firm's numerous customers.

Wm. Ramsey, formerly a prominent wholesale grocer in Toronto, who has for many years been resident in Scotland, is visiting in Toronto again this week.

Alderman N. Lapointe left Montreal Tuesday evening for the southern States. Mr. Lapointe intends to investigate the probabilities of the fruit crop for the summer.

D. A. Philips, one of the "Witch" Co.'s representatives, fell from a ladder when tacking up some advertising in Wright's grocery store in London recently, and injured his ankle. He will be laid up for some time.

Cheese and Butter Quiet With New Make Coming in Largely—Demand for Provisions Stronger With Warm Weather—Will the Canadian Farmer Raise More Hogs?

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, June 3, 1908.

The cheese and butter markets have been comparatively quiet during the past week. The Board of Trade returns indicate some improvement in comparison with last year in receipts. However, they will have to improve considerably before they reach last year's figures. The receipts of butter for the week ending May 30, 1908, were 10,687 packages, as compared with 10,537 packages for the week ending June 1, 1907. These figures show a small balance in favor of the present season. The season's receipts up to May 28 were 21,287 packages, as against 43,607 packages for the same period last year. These figures indicate a falling off of one-half, as compared with the record of 1907.

The receipts of cheese for the week ending May 30, 1908, were 37,468 boxes, against 48,770 boxes for a corresponding period last year, and the record for the season up to May 30 was 95,298 boxes, against 128,204 boxes for the period June 1, 1907.

The increasing supplies of both cheese and butter which are arriving, owing to the prevailing weather conditions which have been admirable, will lead to some accumulations unless the local demand becomes extraordinary, or the export demand increases. The latter is at the present time almost nothing. Since the last report considerable has appeared in the press concerning the green cheese problem, and in some quarters the expressions have been decidedly plain. It is pointed out that Canada cannot afford to lose her reputation for fair and square dealing for the sake of a few whose ideals apparently are extremely mercenary, and who do not possess sufficient national spirit to refrain from these practices, which are decidedly small, to say the least of them. Men who have the interest of the country (as well as their own) at heart, state that the present publicity which this question is receiving will surely result in the passage of adequate legislation which will put a stop to the practice.

The reason of the present remarkable quietude in the export business is due, according to advices from London and Liverpool, to the fact that people have had their attention diverted to less expensive commodities by the high price which prevailed in the cheese market, and even the advent of warm weather and the increased outdoor work has not been sufficient to turn their gaze towards cheese. This argument would seem a fairly logical one if we knew the Englishman's appetite was as easily turned from the favorite paths, but it certainly has not been a national characteristic in the past.

So far as butter is concerned, it appears to be the price which has interfered seriously with the export business, and the fact that Australian and other Antipodean products (to say nothing of Siberian. Danish and other makes) have rendered it impossible for the Canadians to compete in the British markets. In any case, not much attention has been bestowed on the export trade, owing to the fact that local demands have been sufficient.

The last week has been decidedly dull in the butter market, nothing of any importance having occurred. First creamery is quoted at 22c, and dairy, of which there is very little arriving, at 19c.

The local cheese market is quoted at 11¼c to 11⅜c.

Shipments of cheese from Montreal last week were 21,591 boxes, as compared with 20.706 boxes for the previous week, and 34,005 boxes for the corresponding week of last year. There were also shipped from Quebec 1,081 boxes, making total exports for the week of 22,672 boxes. The total exports from Canada since May 1 are 142,125 boxes, as compared with 196,232 boxes for corresponding period of last year. Butter has not been exported so far this season.

THE PROVISION SITUATION

There seems to be something radically wrong in the provision market of Canada. When prices rule high and great scarcity of a commodity, prevails in a special market of a country which possesses all natural advantages to render such a situation improbable, naturally there must be a good reason and the behaviour of the provision market has been such that it calls for some comment.

Since last fall prices have almost continually been very high and there has been a great scarcity of hogs. In discussing the situation with various packers the reason advanced was that the farmers had difficulty in getting the proper feed with the result that so many hogs were not raised. Another, perhaps less charitable dealer, asserts that the farmers have gotten rich out of the hog industry and, therefore, have become indifferent to the demand. Ontario furnishes a large proportion of the stock supplied to the packing houses and in this province the production has fallen off greatly. Some members of the trade do not predict anything very serious, as the fact that so much publicity being given this shortage it is thought will act as an inspiration to the farmers and the yield will again become normal. At the present high prices which rule in the home market competition is precluded in the English market with the Danish and Irish product. If the Canadian farmers could take a lesson from these producers it would be well for them as these producers certainly obtain magnificent results with vastly inferior natural resources. This condition is an economic one which often prevails in new countries. In older countries with denser population and therefore infinitely less land area per capita, every square inch of their soil is taken advantage of and the people are taught to be less careless of natural resources and as a consequence they have a highly concentrated form of farming which is relatively, so far as production is concerned, when compared with a great area like Canada, really amazing. At the present moment there are only about 20,000 hogs arriving per week at Canadian factories and one plant alone has a capacity for this amount. The total capacity for all the packing houses of Canada is somewhere in the neighborhood of 150,000 hogs per week. Considering these facts, it can be readily seen that Canadian packers are not being kept very busy. The situation is one that will bear a good deal of consideration.

Toronto, June 3.

Conditions are comparatively quiet in Canadian packing houses this week. Cables from London report that market as overloaded with Danish bacon and offering little inducement for the Canadian product at present prices. Packers, however, are shipping light supplies to fill the demand which always prefers Canadian product.

Danish "killings" fell off very largely last week as the result of a very generally observed church festival and the aggregate only amounted to 13,000, about 30,000 less than the usual deliveries of late. Stocks of Danish bacon have been kept pretty heavy, however, by the extraordinary shipments of the last few months and it would take some time to clear the market. American shipments last week were moderate at 13,000 boxes.

Deliveries at some points in Ontario were much above the average last week,

BUTTER—The butter market is somewhat easier this week, owing to the continued good supply. In view of the fact that there is no export demand local dealers are having to take care of all supplies coming forward. Weather being too hot for dairy large rolls all dairy is coming forward in boxes and tubs. The local demand is good and receipts are satisfactory.

EGGS—The hot weather has reduced the price of eggs from a ½c to 1c doz., and supplies are coming in freely. The demand, owing to the low price, is very good. Unfortunately the warm weather has had a very noticeable effect on the quality, as many shipments contain a large percentage of bad eggs. The present good supply is causing dealers to begin storing.

TORONTO.

PROVISIONS—The market is fairly active and the past few warm days have created a demand for cured and smoked meats. With the summer season just at hand the prospect for future business is good. The demand has improved over that of a week ago and the supply has been liberal. The increased call for the various meat lines has firmed up the prices, though they remain unchanged, compared with a week ago. Some of the pork packers say the increased buying has made things look brighter around the factories, and an increased output is the result. The retail trade felt an immediate quickening of sales the first warm day.

BUTTER—A still further lowering of price is the feature of the market this week, and before another week goes by butter of good grade may be had around twenty cents. The supply is rather free and the price uncertain. Take the best dairy, for instance, although 19 and 20 cents are quoted, if a buyer comes along for a fairly large lot he may buy at practically his own price. Indeed butter was retailed on Saturday two cents lower than the quoted wholesale price. The present conditions in the country had much to do with that however, for the cows are now changing their feed from fodder to fresh grass in the pastures, and it may be a few days yet before the best grass butter is offering. On all sides reports come to hand saying the pasturage is the best in years. Since the decline in price no large rolls are offering and bakers' butter is off the market.

EGGS—The market price is still firm and although the supply is freer, the demand too, has increased. The past few days, warms days, however, have slackened the selling to retailers, as the buying public are now taking breakfast bacons, etc., instead. Dealers are packing at present prices, although not so much as a year ago, and the opinion is expressed that eggs will be high in price next winter and spring. There appears to be a well grounded rumor to the effect that egg prices will drop before the end of the week. The decline, however, will not amount to much, so far as the retailer is concerned, as the egg dealers are competing in the country for the privilege of buying.

CHEESE—An easier market price is ruling this week although the output of the factories is smaller than a year ago. The local demand is not at all great and the supply is fully equal to any calls made upon it

THE FLOUR AND CEREAL MARKETS

Flour Trade Shows Some Encouragement—Ontario Prices Easier—Cereal Markets Also Brighter.

The splendid crop outlook in all parts of Canada and the prospect of lower grain prices is having its effect on the markets this week. Farmers who have been holding their grain in anticipation of higher values are now rushing it into market and with such excellent prospects for this season's crop and not too brisk a demand, prices tend to an easier point.

Eastern markets seem to be as yet unchanged, with very fair business. Some Ontario millers have eased off a little on Manitoba grades during the week and a declining tendency is noticeable.

The fine weather seems to have brightened up the demand for cereal products and manufacturers are reporting better local demand for their products. Prices generally are pretty well on a basis with those given at last report.

NEW REFRIGERATOR CAR.

English System, Which Obviates the Use of Ice.

A new refrigerator car, the design of two Liverpool experts, has been put upon the English market. The London Times, in describing it, says :

"Up to the present practically no improvement has been made in the ordinary icebox car for carrying perishable produce, a system that has decided limitations. The car now introduced accomplishes the cooling by means of a mechanical refrigeration plant, which consists of a small inclosed type ammonia compressor of special design, mounted on one end of the car; an ammonia condenser designed for cooling by the air current produced by the motion of the car and placed on the roof; an expansion valve arranged to keep, automatically, a constant pressure in the evaporators within the car, and consequently a constant temperature therein, and ammonia evaporators placed in suitable positions inside the car arranged to provide a regular supply of cold to keep the car temperature constant during stoppages. The compressor is driven from one of the axles by chain gearing, a change speed gear and disengaging mechanism being interposed between the axle and compressor. The driving wheel placed on the axle may be arranged to allow the toothed part to swing in either direction, and thds keep in the same plane as the driven wheel on the intermediate shaft.

"The advantages claimed for this type of car over those now in use are that it is independent of any ice supply whatever; it is available at any point on the line and at all times; it obviates delays due to icing, and, in addition, the expense attaching to ice storage and filling; it effects a lower temperature than is possible with ice tanks; it can undertake any length of journey without renewals, and it is free from the risks due to careless or insufficient icing."

INTERESTING TRADE MARK DECISION.

An interesting case regarding a matter recently treated editorially in these columns has just been decided in the United States Circuit Court for New Jersey. Walter Baker & Co., the chocolate manufacturers, took action against R. V. Delapenha & Co., of New York, on the ground that the product sold by them, representing a Swiss manufacturer, and known as Auto Noisettes, was an infringement of the word "auto," and the figure of an automobile, as registered by the Baker Co.

The defence was that the marks had been used by the manufacturers in Switzerland before the Baker Co. had registered them ; that the marks were not alike, and that the Swiss products were made partly of ground filberts and therefore were not the same class of goods as the plaintiff's sweet chocolate. Notwithstanding this, an injunction with costs was given the plaintiff.

"Men Who Sell Things"

Chapter IV.—The Order-Taker and the Drone Identical—"Heart Work" and Faith Needed to Win Success—The Two-Wheeled Man and His Failure—Aspirations and Openings.

By Walter D. Moody—Serial rights for Canada purchased by the MacLean Publishing Co. from the publishers, A. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

CHAPTER IV.

THE ORDER-TAKER.

It's a good thing for the man who looks at the corns on his hands to remember that on Easy Street the corns are on the heart.

The Order-taker and the Drone are identical. Men of this stamp while waiting for an inspiration would find success at once, if they were not so afraid of a little perspiration.

The salesman goes out and digs up business, while the Order-taker just shambles around, waiting to be fed, like the hippopotamus in the menagerie. The only difference is that his capacity is more limited. Even having things thrown to him worries and wearies him. Mental and physical courage is lacking in his make-up to the extent that anything like effort of any sort is foreign to his comprehension when it is necessary to go after business.

As says the rag-time song, the Drone aimlessly wanders through life in the atmosphere of—"I don't know where I'm going, but I'm on my way." He is bright enough in many respects, but a natural born ne'er-do-well.

Imagine a salesman with just sufficient energy to send out advance cards and check trunks from one town to another; whose sole ambition seems centred in drawing his breath and his pay, and you have a life-size picture of the Order-taker.

The Order-taker drops out of the race at the first wayside shelter on the slope of Mount Success; but he is a different type from the Knocker, as he does no actual harm, though he fails to get anywhere. Besides, knocking requires energy, even if perverted. The mediocre capacity must be eked out by brave resolve and persistent effort.

Heart Work Needed.

When the old lady was training her son for the trapeze, the boy made three or four rather ineffectual efforts to get over the bar. Then she was heard to suggest. "John Henry Hobbs, if you will just throw your heart over the bar, your body will follow."

And thus it is with the salesman who is inclined to take things easy. If he will just throw his heart into his work, success will follow, and then he will see the employer's and employe's interests going forward hand in hand, as they should go, supporting each other.

William Matthews, at one time Professor of English Literature in the Chicago University, writing on the subject of Self-reliance, in "Getting On in the World," says:

"A lobster, when left high and dry among the rocks, has not instinct and energy enough to work his way back to the sea, but waits for the sea to come to him. If it does not come, he remains where he is, and dies, although the slightest effort would enable him to reach the waves, which are perhaps tossing and tumbling within a yard of him."

The world is full of human lobsters, men stranded on the rocks of business, who, instead of putting forth their own energies are waiting for some grand billow of good fortune to set them afloat. There are many young men of vivid imaginations, who, instead of carrying their own burdens, are always dreaming of some Hercules coming to give them a lift.

HE'S EXPECTING YOU.

When a wholesale or manufacturing house has something special to offer the trade, it can help its travelers materially by advertising in the trade newspaper. It quite often happens that the retailer doesn't want to see the traveler. The traveler doesn't get a chance to state his proposition. But if the retailer is first interested in a proposition through his trade paper, he will be waiting for the traveler to come along to give him more particulars. Trade paper advertising assures a welcome for the traveler.

"The hardest fortune of all is to find fortune easily."

Good hard work is one of the richest blessings that God has given man. The Idler, the Drone, the Order-taker, or whatever we may choose to call him, either in salesmanship or out of it—the man who fails to make the most of his privilege to work and amount to something—sins not only against his Maker, but against himself and society.

Many an otherwise good salesman has remained all his life in the light-weight class, solely because he lacked faith in himself.

"Faith is the lever that moves mountains."

"Faith is not faith until it gets into your fingers and your feet."

Faith begets faith. The salesman who has faith in himself has faith in his territory and faith in his house. His employers and his customers, seeing the strength of his position, place their faith in him also.

Faith and Its Function.

There is no standard broad enough or high enough with which to measure the value of faith in the commercial world. It is the Alpha and Omega of all business activity. It is the guiding star, shedding its beams of trust, confidence, goodwill, and good-cheer along the pathway of every successful transaction, large or small. There can be absolutely no trade without faith; hence, its indispensableness as a commercial asset.

The salesman of little faith in himself is not only enveloped in doubt and mistrust, so far as his ability to win for himself is concerned, but his faith in his proposition, his employers, and his fellow-workers hangs in the balance, reducing his chances for success to the minimum. He is apt to be peevish, ill-natured, and enshrouded in an atmosphere of insecurity, and he soon drops into oblivion or joins the large class of "floaters" who are continually looking for a job.

A salesman, to succeed, must not only have faith in himself, but faith in the article he is selling. He should approach his customer in such a manner as to leave no room for doubt that he himself believes what he says of the article he has to sell.

In a salesman of this character, faith is the source of courage, industry, and perseverance. It makes for him a strong personality. He surmounts all troubles by dint of his own energy. His name spells S-U-C-C-E-S-S.

Wishes Instead of Work.

Some one has said: "The trouble with too many young men is that their wishbones are where their backbones ought to be."

A practical psychologist asks the question:

"Did you ever say 'I can' and 'I will' with the strong feeling that you spoke the truth? If so, you then felt within you the thrill which seems to cause every atom of your being to vibrate in harmony with some note in the grand scale of life which has been sounded by the I AM—the real self.

"If so, you caught a momentary glimpse of the inner light; heard a note of the song of the soul; were conscious for a moment of yourself, and in that moment you knew that untold power and possibilities were yours. You felt somehow that you were in touch with the source of strength, knowledge, happiness and peace. You felt that you were equal to any task, capable of executing any undertaking. All the universe seemed to vibrate in the same key with your thought."

Sam Jones, the famous Southern wit, lecturing on Faith, once said: ,

"You well know what it is to pull on a cold collar. It takes a good tame horse to do it. You hitch him up of a cold, frosty morning, hitch him to a big load, and he sets to and pulls it off like a mule. That is what we call a work of faith. it is pulling on a cold collar. That kind of horse you can hitch to a tree on a frosty morning, and he will make a hundred set pulls at it. That is what we call a work of faith—pulling on a cold collar.

"I knew a fellow once who had a wagon-load of wood to haul to camp, and it was a cold morning. He hitched up his horses, but they would not pull a pound. He put a boy on each horse, and then ran them up and down, riding about two or three miles, and got them warmed up, and then hitched them up, and they pulled right off."

A dog will run a rabbit when he feels like doing it, and when he doesn't feel like it he won't.

A salesman of faith will show you what he is by what he does. If you will find me a salesman who is busy for his house, I will show you a salesman that has works of faith and will do his duty whether he feels like it or not.

Some salesmen think if they do a thing when they do not feel like it, they are hypocrites. Well, we will talk about that some other time.

"I feel it is my duty to do so and so."

Sing it out; you have heard such salesmen, haven't you?

The Pleasures of Work.

I tell you what it is: to a real live wide-awake salesman, his work is a pleasure; it is a privilege. All others should keep in mind the business aphorism. "They who do no more than they are paid for get paid for no more than they do."

You know, when they first built engines, they put only two wheels on them. They would run and make schedule time, but schedule time was only just three miles an hour, and it was all they could do to pull one car. After a while they put a jack under that engine and put eight more wheels under it, making ten in all; and that engine will cut along at the rate of fifty miles an hour, and will pull forty cars if you couple them on.

And then came the "great moguls"; those great living, snorting, prancing things of finest steel, with a speed of seventy or eighty miles an hour. That is the difference between the little two-wheeled fellow and the sort they run now. That is the difference between the Order-taker and the professional salesman. There are plenty of little two-wheelers in the business world. Brother, cut that two-wheeled business out, if you ever hope to make a schedule of more than three miles an hour.

What would you think of a man starting from home who would go trotting down the railroad on foot? You ask him why he doesn't take the cars, and he answers: "Well, I feel it is my duty to go on foot."

The Two-Wheeler Failed.

I remember very well one of these two-wheeled men. He crossed my path when I had been out on the road about three or four years. It was a "Ships-that-pass-in-the-night" sort of experience, which leaves behind the shadowy impression that something crossed your bow in the fading light, but you could not make out just what manner of craft it was, or where it hailed from.

I had been out on my advance trip with a line of ostrich goods and velvets, and was winding up the last week of an unusually successful fall business, when I was suddenly stricken with a serious case of blood-poisoning, contracted from opening a water-blister on my hand with a rusty knife-blade. I was working on my way home from northern Michigan, and had but a few towns left, when the doctor ordered me to take the first train home and see a first-class surgeon, adding that I had no time to lose if I valued my life.

I hesitated about taking his advice, hating to give up a winning streak of business; besides, I knew that my rival salesman from our house was working might and main to nose me out of first place on the sales list. That was not all. In the next town I had a slim hold on an account that had started new the season before, and as I was out ahead of my competitors, I felt that my chances were good to sell the customer his opening fall bill. The doctor finally convinced me that a dead salesman was of very little use; and not wishing to shuffle off this mortal coil at the very outset of my career, I went home and remained there for three weeks.

I worried and chafed under my enforced idleness, realizing that before I could get back to that town and my new customer, the country would be full of millinery salesmen just as eager for that first bill as I was.

As soon as convalescence set in, I wired him the exact date of my arrival, and not waiting for the bandages to come off, with my arm still in a sling, I set out to do the best I could in handling my trunks with the aid of porters and fellow-travelers.

I arrived on schedule time. Jumping out of the bus, I did not stop to register, but called to the porter to throw my trunks into the best sample-room he had, and was off like a shot for my customer's store.

Entering, I was filled with misgivings, half expecting some salesman had been there and secured that much-coveted bill ahead of me. I greeted him with as much confidence as my shaken faith would permit. I expected it; almost the first thing he said was, "A new man from —— & Co. was here a few days ago." But my hopes arose when he added. " But I didn't buy anything from him. His samples were not opened, and he came in sort o' looking as if he expected to be turned down. I really did want to see his line, and might have given him an order, having heard his house well spoken of; but I guess my greeting was kind of cold. When I said I didn't want anything anyway, and as long as his samples were not unpacked I wouldn't have him go to the trouble of opening them just for me, as it wouldn't pay him, he waited around for a few minutes for further confirmation, and then explained that, owing to his big territory and being late, he was making towns pretty fast, and that if there wasn't much I wanted he'd see me next trip. But I don't believe he will ever make another, do you?"

I thought as he did about it, and it afterwards proved that we were both right. To make a long story short, my friend told me just about what he had said to the other fellow—that he didn't want much, and he had made up his mind that he would wait until he went to market to do his buying.

Work Which Won.

I reminded him of his desire to see —— & Co.'s line, adding that as he was the only customer there, I was obliged to remain all the afternoon anyway, and would rather put in the time showing him the line than lie around the hotel office doing nothing.

It was not easy to budge him, but he finally said, "Well, my boy, if you have got grit enough to unpack your stuff with a game arm, just to show me your line, I guess I can find time to run over to the sample-room a little later."

He came before I was through unpacking and stayed long enough to give me a bill for over one thousand dollars, and helped me pack up when we were through.

No, he didn't buy from me out of sympathy for my crippled condition. He was too good a merchant for that.

On leaving, he said half to himself but loud enough for me to hear, "Most curious fellow I ever saw." Then aloud to me, "Likely I would have given him the bill I have given you if he hadn't been so confounded lazy."

While leaning back in the cushions, bumping along over the ties, did you ever say to yourself, "If I am a salesman, I'm going to be one all over, through and through; but I won't be a little, old, dried-up, knock-kneed, one-horse, shriveled nothing, anywhere"?

Some Aspirations.

Haven't you had a desire to rise above the sight of the kind of little fellow that you can pack in a sardine-box with nineteen others? You have never known much about salesmanship if you have never felt in your soul that you wanted to be somebody—something—so big that you could fly up, and up, and up. If you have had this sensation, then you know something about what salesmanship is.

Canadian Strawberries to be a Record Crop—First Watermelons of the Season —Old Vegetables Off the Market—Sea Salmon a New Fish Line.

An improving trade is being done all over the country in these markets, and the past week was splendid in all lines of goods. California oranges are being replaced by Mediterranean varieties. All American fruit and vegetables are of superior quality this year and the Canadian lines are expected to be first class. Pineapples and bananas have the call at present and lemons are well up in the race. Delaware strawberries are now being offered and are much easier in price. Canadian berries are expected to be on the market in a fortnight's time, and by all reports this season will be a bumper one for quantity, and the quality, too, will be A1. There was a tremendous lot of strawberry plants set out in the Niagara and Oakville districts and the growers are already looking about for pickers. Grimsby men say last year they got pickers from Buffalo. Other Canadian lines give every indication of a record yield. Every tree—peach, pear, cherry, plum and apple—was laden with bloom this spring and all the conditions seem to be O.K.

In the vegetable line tomatoes and Egyptian onions took a drop in price owing to the great quantities offering. New Brunswick Delaware potatoes are firm, as the demand is fully equal to the supply. All old vegetables are about done and a number of the early imported vegetables are off the market. The first Canadian line to go is celery, very little of it offering.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—Navel oranges have advanced since the last quotations, now standing at $4 to $4.50. Mexicans, bitter and California blood oranges are now off the market. Sorrento oranges are being quoted at $2.25 to $2.50 in 160, 200 and 300 sizes. Pineapples have weakened a little, being quoted as low as $2.80, Other lines remain the same as last week. The demand was remarkably good during the hot weather, but fell off somewhat during the cooler days at the end of the week.

VEGETABLES—Egyptian onions have fallen off ½c per lb. since last week, which is due to the increasing supply which is arriving since the opening of navigation. Boston lettuce is a little higher, having advanced 10c. New cabbage are also commanding a slightly increased price. New potatoes have declined 50c a bushel. FISH—Haddock and cod continue plentiful and prices are low. Lake trout, whitefish and pickerel are in good supply. Gaspe salmon is now beginning to arrive more freely and the price is coming down every day. Among the smoked lines haddies and kippers continue in fair demand, while other lines are slow. Dore is the only fish which has shown any advance since the last quotations, now being quoted at 10c, instead of 8c. Pike, whitefish, shad and oysters have all declined.

GREEN FRUITS—A very good business has been and is being done. All lines of fruit are going well and the seasonable varieties especially are called for on all sides. California oranges are going off the market, and are being replaced by the Mediterranean varieties. Pineapples and bananas are slightly easier and are the two fruits mostly asked for. They are of excellent quality this year. Lemons, too, are first rate, and much selling is expected during the warm months. Strawberries are three cents lower and are now coming from Baltimore vicinity and from the State of Delaware. Canadian berries are expected to be a record crop. California cherries are again on the market and a new line is watermelons, a Toronto house getting one of the first cars out of Florida. They are, though, a little dear yet for ordinary consumption, but the melons look good and should find a ready sale. Limes are another new line of fresh fruit.

FISH—A normal demand has been met with a normal supply. The fish men are satisfied with the trade now passing. Prices remain unchanged and sturgeon from the northern streams have been added to the list of fresh fish. The first of the season's sea salmon was put on sale this week and the price during the past ten days has been cut in two. We quoted sea salmon last week at 30c, although scarcely any was offering. Today it is 16c. The Atlantic salmon season begins about the middle of May, but the season this year appears to be a full week late. The first catch sold for 24c wholesale at the seaboard, but already the price is coming down.

NO BROOK TROUT IN TORONTO.

Local Fish Dealers Want Privileges Allowed in Other Cities.

The Toronto fish dealers have a grievance, and they are airing it. The Ontario law forbids them to handle trout, while Quebec leaves the door wide open, not only for catching and selling, but also for shipping. The result is that the New York hotels have Canadian trout on their bills of fare every day, while here at home none can be had.

Until a few days ago Quebec trout were shipped to Ottawa, Hamilton and London without question, while none has been allowed to be sold on the Toronto market. The dealers say that they do not want trout caught in Ontario, but they do want a look-in on the Quebec out-put.

A prominent dealer states that in all the years he has been in business he has not bought five pounds of Ontario trout, simply because he did not know where to obtain it. Most of the trout caught in Ontario is taken from fish preserves and what little is offered for sale is put at an almost prohibitive price—thirty to forty cents a pound—while Quebec brook trout is offered in fairly large quantities at from twelve to fifteen cents per pound.

GROCERY FACTS.

Information the Grocer and His Clerk Should Have About the Goods They Sell.

COCOANUTS AND COPRA—In the east the cocoanut is marketed chiefly in the form of copra, a name applied to the dried meat of the nut, used in the production of oil, which is in turn employed in the manufacture of soap, candles and a so-called butter. The fibres are used in the manufacture of mattings, some of which are re-imported into the countries whence the fibers were obtained and they are also used in the manufacture of brushes, brooms, rope and twines of several kinds, according to the monthly bulletin of the International Bureau of the American Republics.

Formerly copra was obtained from the cocoanut by crude and primitive methods but at present there are plants established for the manufacture of copra, oil and cocoanut fibers with great rapidity, less expense and greater perfection. Machinery is used to break the cocoanuts and to facilitate the preparation of copra, and may be operated by hand, employing only two men, therefor. These two men can cut or break 6,000 cocoanuts daily.

Of the three important products obtained from cocoanuts—namely, cocoanut oil, flour and lard—the first product is manufactured at the place where the cocoanuts are cultivated, by extracting the white pulp of the nut and depositing the same in pieces in a wooden trough, from which the oil drops and flows by itself when exposed to the sun. As the liquid thus obtained abounds in impurities and is liable to decomposition, the copra or pulp is at present treated by means of improved processes, yielding as much as 60 per cent. of refined cocoanut oil in the factories established in Marseilles, which are the most important in Europe.

From this refinement of the cocoanut has naturally resulted the cocoanut lard industry, which has become so general abroad under the name of vegetaline, vegetable lard, taline and cocoaline. These lards are rich in nutritious substances and neither in flavor nor appearance remind the consumer of their origin. Its patrons have gone so far as to affirm that this vegetable lard is more nutritious than animal lard, inasmuch as it contains 90 per cent. of grease, while the animal lard, for instance, contains only 80 per cent. Cocoanut oil is used mainly in the manufacture of soap, three-fourths of the soap stock in the great manufactories of perfumeries consisting of cocoanut oil, which communicates to the paste formed an extraordinary fineness, rendering it also exceedingly foamy.—New England Grocer.

GUILD CASE AGAIN POSTPONED.

Crown Secures Enlargement Till September 20th.

And still the famous Guild case drags on. It was set for trial on Wednesday of this week, June 3, and members of the Guild were very anxious that the matter should be finally settled but at Toronto on Thursday. May 27, Mr. Blackstock, K.C., acting for the department of the Attorney-General of Ontario, made application to Chief Justice Falconbridge for a postponement till Sept. 20, which application was granted. The reason given was that the Crown was not ready to proceed with its case.

The way this case has been handled by the Government has been exceedingly unjust to the defendants, the Wholesale Grocers Guild. It is two years since it was sent to a higher court and almost a year since a true bill was brought in. At one time the Guild asked for a postponement because of the absence of essential witnesses, but since then they have been trying to have the case brought on and disposed of but without success. The Attorney-General's Department has been instrumental three times in having it put off until now the whole matter is assuming something the nature of a farce.

Leaman & Walsh, grocers, Moncton, N.B., have dissolved partnership, Mr. Walsh retiring to enter another field. The business will be continued under the old name of H. G. Leaman.

CAME DAILY FOR OIL.

Chicago Boy Looted Cash Drawer While Grocer Went Into Basement—Is Sent to Workhouse.

The game that Anton Irman worked upon Grocer John Schramek, 922 Thirty-fifth street, was worthy of a better cause. For some time past Irman, who came from Chicago, provided himself with spending money by calling daily almost at Schramek's store with a kerosene can, having the grocer go into the basement where he kept the oil to fill the can, and meanwhile helping himself to the contents of the cash drawer.

This happened so often that Schramek began to believe that the place was bewitched, never suspecting the smooth Chicago boy. He appealed to the police and Detectives Seehawer and O'Gorman were given the case. They examined the premises, and suspecting Irman because of his daily visits for oil, gave the grocer instructions about the thief's capture.

The next time Irman called, Mrs. Schramek locked the front door from outside while her husband went into the basement. The police officers were then called and found Irman with several clearing-house checks which he had taken from the drawer. It is a peculiar fact that he never took cash, but clearing house checks. On a charge of vagrancy Irman was sent to the workhouse for ninety days.

means a friend for the grocer. It is just as true that the sale of inferior goods in the long run loses friends for the grocer. Then why take chances of losing trade by passing out cheap and inferior stove polishes when the best stove polishes may be sold by you at a good profit and help make friends for you every day.

That is a good reason for urging the sale of our very popular RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes and SUN PASTE in Tins. Every package is right when you sell it and makes friends for you and for us day in and day out. Just what you want to push. We know you think so.

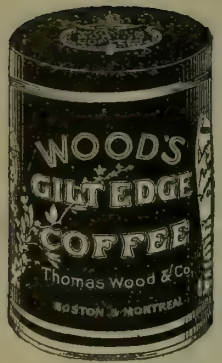
"The Best is None Too Good."



ESTABLISHED 1879

That being the motto of millions of consumers, how necessary it is for the seller to be prepared to suit them.

Those who ignore this suggestion often wonder why "the other fellow" gets their trade.

But the "knowing ones" know why it is.

The medium between the highest and the doubtful is a dangerous one for the Grocer.

You want goods that will not only create, but will HOLD trade; and that is precisely what do and have been doing for many years.

"Time is fleeting," says the old adage; we may add: So is trade in haphazard Coffee.

GILLETT'S PERFUMED LYE

CAUTION.

Put a strong glass on the label and examine it closely every time. Always look for the name "Gillett's."

Like all good articles, which are extensively advertised, Gillett's Lye is frequently and very closely imitated. In some instances the imitators have actually copied directions and other printed matter from our label word for word. Be wise, and refuse to purchase imitation articles for they are never satisfactory.

Insist On Getting Gillett's Lye

and decline to accept anything that looks to be an imitation or that is represented to be "just as good" or "better," or "the same thing." In our experience of over fifty years in business we have never known of an imitation article that has been a success, for imitators are not reliable people. At the best the "just as good" kinds are only trashy imitations, so decline them with thanks every time.

Re PEAS

Do you take the trouble to talk quality and grade? In quality there is only one thing to talk, viz., Canadian Canners' Brands.

To-day the Canadian Canners' Peas are the finest in the world. It takes years of experience and the most expensive modern machinery to turn out first quality Peas. The Canadian Canners have both.

Canned Peas are sold in four grades or qualities, viz.:

" 2.—Sweet Wrinkle "
" 3.—Early June "
" 4.—Standard "

Our Grade 2 or Sweet Wrinkle Pea is the most satisfactory Pea packed. It costs very little more than the Standard No. 4 Pea, but on account of its superior quality you can sell it with a much larger margin of profit.

Push Sweet Wrinkle No. 2 Peas

You Cannot Afford to Sell Inferior Canned Goods

In fact, nothing will pay you better than to stock a line of canned goods which is distinctly above mediocrity. Our ever-increasing sales are an indication that are keeping the lead and giving entire satisfaction wherever sold which is only natural, considering the fact that every can of Old Homestead Brand is uniformly excellent. The pick of the crop is secured for Old Homestead Brand, and our up-to-date canning methods preserve to the full every speck of the natural deliciousness of sound, well grown fruit and vegetables.

OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND

Canned Fruits and Vegetables

YOUR BUSINESS
OUR BUSINESS

When your business shows an increase over the previous year it means you are selling something the public want—something that satisfies those with whom you do business. The sales of "SALADA" during the past two weeks show an increase over the corresponding period in 1907 of

7,210 lbs. for the week ending May 23rd, 1908
12,340 lbs. for the week ending May 30th, 1908

The quality of "SALADA" alone produces these results.
It is the tea it pays you to handle.

The reason why Mrs. Smith was determined to have Windsor Salt was and is plainly evident its uniform excellence, purity, whiteness and dryness. It pays to sell the salt that helps to sell other goods in the store.

Are the goods that are a little better than the others: goods that will make sales where the others won't. Oso Brand Pickles are good pickles, and show their quality. We have special facilities for turning out the best pickles, and we have made the most of them. For instance, we provide the seed from which the vegetables are grown and so get the best from the start; the cucumbers go straight from the vine to the factory, so that none of the fresh crispness is lost. We make our own vinegar and it cannot be beaten for pickling purposes. It will certainly pay you to specify that you want our goods when ordering pickles.

United States Wholesalers in Convention

Annual Gathering of National Association at Atlantic City Last Week Reported by The Grocer's Representative—Questions of Vital Import to Canadian Trade.

Atlantic City, June 6.—The annual meeting of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States, which ended here last night, was an affair of great importance. There were no Canadians present, excepting the representative of The Grocer. The live wholesale firms in Canada make a serious mistake in not attending this and similar gatherings. There are a good many subjects in common, and to hear them discussed is important, but the greatest value is the opportunity of associating with the biggest men in the trade who are doing things on broader lines, who have long ago solved many questions that are worrying us in Canada, and to receive inspiration to attempt greater things. Forty-two States were represented, and the membership controls 85 per cent. of the foodstuffs sold in the United States. Judging from appearances they are most prosperous as a class, for they were a jolly, well-fed, well-groomed lot, and in great contrast to another organization—an insurance tariff association—which met in the same rooms a few days before. The former were more of the stamp of Canadian grocers of twenty years ago, men like the late Mr. Ince, Mr. Hebert, Mr. A. M. Smith or Mr. Childs. The modern wholesaler in Canada leads too strenuous a life, he works harder and gets less out of it. There are too many in business, and it seems to be getting worse. The Guild ought to seriously consider the cause.

Meetings Well Handled.

The meetings were unusually well handled by the President, Mr. Judson, of Grand Rapids, who in conversation afterwards admitted that he had much experience with political gatherings. The Vice-President, who had little to do officially, shows a tendency to baldness, but he effectually checked any chaffing on that account by pointing out that manufacturers never put marble tops on cheap furniture. I mention the point mainly for the use of W. H. Seyler, the manager of The Grocer. He ought to have it electrotyped and ready for use.

Broad Lines of Business.

The speeches, reports and discussions showed that they are doing business on broader lines than we do in Canada, and as an organization they carry much weight in their particular business and in the Legislative Chambers of the nation and of their own States. Their annual income from fees is about $30,000, and they employ a permanent secretary at $5,000 a year, and a counsel with his attorneys, which costs them $7,000 annually. And they were all agreed that the money was a most profitable investment. The counsel looks after all legislative work and advises the members individually on all legal points arising in trade matters. It was pointed out that 60 per cent. of their efforts to improve trade conditions had already been successful.

Subjects Under Discussion.

The subjects that are mainly agitating them at the present time are the pure food laws—which every State in the Union is dealing with, and always in a way that seriously affects the dealer; recognition of the wholesaler as the most economical and legitimate distributer of all manufactured products to the retailer; demand for increased cash discounts and proper remuneration for distributing manufacturers' goods; discontinuance of the practice by manufacturers of subsidizing jobbers' salesmen; elimination of "deals" and "schemes" of manufacturers which are alleged to be burdensome to the jobbers; demand of the jobbers for a contract guaranteeing specified quantity delivery of canned goods, with the usual discounts; demand of the jobber for a more favorable dried fruit contract; demand for a more favorable foreign nut contract; plea for uniform bills of lading and reciprocal demurrage.

Practically all the work was handled by committees by whom it was thoroughly considered before being presented to the meeting. There were some excellent addresses, that by the President of the Canners' Association being particularly good, and I hope you may find space for that and some of the others, not that I agree or differ from them, but because they contain much food.

Pure Food Law Coming in Canada.

A Pure Food Act will undoubtedly be a live question among the trade in Canada before long for we follow the United States continually, and the report of the lawyer who is watching the report for the United States Association, will give an idea of troubles the trade in Canada may have to deal with. Already some of the matters have been bothering us here.

Mr. Breed, in his report of legal work done, said:

"For two years Senator Beveridge has been urging on the Senate of the United States the passage of a measure requiring the dating of meat food products. At present no State and no foreign country has such a law; it is not required for the public health; it would accomplish no good purpose, and it would be most disastrous to retailer, jobber and manufacturer. Dating measures, however, seems to be popular. They sound attractive to the consumer and during the past year they have been proposed in several State Legislatures. Yet it cannot be truthfully said that the consumers or legislators have ever considered the actual effect of such measures upon the public health or the trade of the country.

"Fruits and vegetables are produced only in season. To preserve them they are packed in hermetically sealed tins. If there is a defect in the sealing it usually becomes at once apparent. Under the custom of the date all goods of this character are returned to the manufacturer without loss. But assume that there is an imperfection, how would the dating of the tin indicate anything as to the healthfulness of its contents?

"Dating Laws Absurdities."

"Dating laws as health measures are absurdities. They constitute and should be classed among the many impracticable suggestions of food faddists and political agitators. Dating means grading. Yesterday's product is made to look less healthful and less valuable than to-day's. Dating means a monthly readjustment of all stocks on jobbers' and retailers' shelves; a monthly revision of prices, since the purchasers will not pay the same prices for different grades of goods. Dating means a discrimination against every product seeking a distant mark, because the time necessarily consumed in transportation will render such product out of date on arrival and unable to compete at an even price with locally packed goods. Dating means the abandonment of foreign markets, because American dated goods cannot compete with the foreign undated goods. Dating means the curtailment of the custom of packing in quantities at times when the new product is most abundant or can be purchased at the best price. Dating means the inevitable increase of price to the consumer without any accruing benefits; in fact, dating laws require a readjustment of all present methods of packing, selling, pricing and all to what end? Merely to satisfy a whim, a fad for the latest, not yesterday's, but always to-day's."

Work of the Legal Department.

The report of the association counsel also told of the work of the legal department during the year toward securing of favorable legislation for pure food and other laws, affecting the trade. Members of legal department attended meetings and conventions of pure food and other organizations which touch the trade, and Mr. Breed declared that the work of departments and committees of the association had saved the wholesale grocers of the country sums running into the millions by their efforts to care for the business of jobbing. Twelve State Legislatures have met during the year, and more than 1,000 bills have been examined, while of 45 bills introduced which would have hurt the trade, not one has been allowed to pass. The convention passed resolutions allowing expenditure of a big defense fund to carry on the work which is being made the chief object of the organization.

Conciliation Rather Than Force.

The most important feature of the President's address was his reference to agreements with manufacturers and transportion companies, where he said:

"Through our committees we have learned the tremendous responsibilities resting upon the shoulders of the administrative officers of manufacturers and transportation companies and the pressure brought to bear upon them from powerful opposing forces, necessitating, in many instances, a middle course, and we feel that those interests wish to deal equitably with us. We have, therefore, learned that it is a mistake to try by harsh and unreasoning measures to coerce those whom we would influence. Trade is a game of give and take. When we ask a concern of magnitude to modify a policy that has won its success and established its prestige we will fail and deserve to fail, in our purpose, if we merely demand such change without supporting the request with cogent arguments showing that, while we will be accommodated and benefited, the best interests of the concern itself will also be enhanced.

"This situation brings our association face to face with the reciprocity proposition as to what we are going to do in consideration of concessions or changes of policy that we may seek at the hands of th producer and manufacturer. When we want anything it is not wise to abandon the trade proposition with which we are most experienced for diplomacy with which we are, possibly, less familiar. When we want something from the other fellow we will greatly increase our prospects of getting it if we have something to trade him.

"In general terms I may say that our committees have found the large interests indifferent to thoughtless criticism and unresponsive to anything having the appearance of threats of coercion but always amenable to conciliatory approach and to intelligent argument based on facts.

"Experience has confirmed in our minds the truth of the old adage that "molasses catches more flies than vinegar," and the splendid results to which I referred at the outset of my talk have been achieved by our committee along the lines of conciliatory negotiation.

A Personal Interest in Agreements.

"In this connection I want to emphasize as strongly as I can one vitally important duty; that is, when, through one of our committees, we enter into an agreement with a manufacturer or a transportation company that every member of our association take a personal interest in carrying out our part of the agreement as faithfully as though it were a financial obligation. It would be a fatal mistake for the individual members of our association to take a lukewarm interest in carrying into execution in good faith our part of any agreement into which we might enter through the negotiations of one of our committees.

"It needs no argument to support the contention that, when an agreement is entered into and the other party carries out his part of it with fidelity, if we or any portion of us should treat our obligations in the premises with indifference we will find it a harder and harder matter to get corporations to enter into agreements of any nature whatsoever with us. In fact, the faithful and energetic discharge of agreements and obligations will be the measure of our success, our prestige and our usefulness.

"Just here the thought occurs that it would be a good thing to always deal with each other along the lines that experience has taught us to deal, with the big corporations."

Purchase Discounts.

The committee on purchase discounts presented a report showing that during the year it had been able tto negotiate about fifteen concessions from manufacturers on which the members of this association alone, not to count the trade generally, which alike shared in the benefits, had made a saving of between half and three-quarters of a mil dollars. And the committee has other negotiations under way.

Sales Discount.

This committee recommended the following schedule of terms: Sixty days or 1½ per cent. in ten days—Domestic canned goods, soap (laundry, scouring and toilet; coffee (except outside proprietary brands of package goods); spices (ground); tea (in less than original packages); flavoring extracts; pipes. Imported Bottled and Tinned Goods—120 days, or 3 per cent. in 10 days—Teas in original packages, 30 days, or 1 per cent. in 10 days—All goods not otherwise specified. Optional—Tobaccos, cigars, cigarettes.

Which it desired the trade throughout the United States to live up to.

Subsidizing Salesmen.

The grocers have had a good deal of trouble, particularly with The American Tobacco Company, over subsidizing the commercial travelers representing the wholesale houses to push their goods, and a special committee was appointed to take up the matter with The American Tobacco Company's officials. The question was very thoroughly discussed, and finally the Tobacco Company agreed unconditionally to cease the practice throughout the entire United States. The committee's report on the matter was as follows:

"In view of the concession of the American Tobacco Company and the agreeable manner in which they met this request, your committee feel called upon to urge upon the members and distributors of tobacco generally throughout the United States to show appreciation by insisting upon all others who are influencing your employes by premium offers, cash donations, or in any manner attempting to gain special efforts in their behalf from your salesmen, discontinue the practice and if necessary refuse positively to submit to same."

Other Important Resolutions.

Among the other important resolutions unanimously agreed to at the meeting were the following:

"Whereas, the National Association of Retail Grocers adopted at their last annual convention the following resolution,

"Resolved, that the National Association of Retail Grocers urges upon all of the manufacturers of the United States, who market their goods under proprietary brands or trade marks, the wisdom of the policy of establishing and maintaining by contract a reasonable profit at which their goods shall be sold, such profit to be regulated according to trade conditions in the different localities. We are opposed to any prices being printed upon the package. Therefore, be it resolved that we express our approval and support of the policy as set forth in the above resolution and that a copy of this resolution be supplied to all manufacturers of proprietary brands in the United States."

"Whereas, the extremely diverse and conflicting statutes and decision of the several states upon the subject of the issuance, use and interpretation of bills of lading leads to much extensive and unnecessary litigation among shippers, bankers and railroads, resolved, that the National Wholesale Grocers' Association favors national and state legislation designed so far as possible to require the use of uniform bills of lading throughout the United States, and the imposing of a penalty for the issuance of any bills of lading before the receipt of the goods, or the surrender and cancellation of any bill of lading without the actual delivery of the goods."

"Whereas, an amendment of our postal laws, establishing a parcels post has been and is being advocated before Congress and whereas the passage of such a law would change and utterly disrupt established methods and channels for the distribution of all commodities in package form and would seriously injure and jeopardise the life and existence of the retail merchants, therefore, resolved, that we are unalterably opposed to the establishing of a parcels post and urge the members of this association to use their influence in opposing the proposed amendment of our postal laws."

"Whereas, the manufacturers, representatives in the different centres have formed an association for the purpose of correcting trade abuses with which they and ourselves have to contend therefore, resolved, that we extend to them our best wishes for their success and assure them that we will be glad to co-operate in promoting all reasonable measures for our mutual benefit. Resolved, further, that we declare our loyalty to those manufacturers who recognize and adopt the wholesale grocer as the legitimate channel through which their respective products shall be distributed."

"Resolved, that we reaffirm our loyalty to the principles as set forth in our constitution and by-laws regarding free deals and we view with satisfaction the recognition of the justness of our position by those manufacturers who have expressed a desire to allow the jobber ample compensation for handling the same, resolved, that the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States is opposed to the enactment by Congress or by state legislatures of measures requiring that the labels of food products of any kind shall bear the date of packing, a statement of the weight or measure, or a list of the ingredients and percentages."

FIRE IN WINNIPEG PACKING PLANT.

$75,000 Damage Done by Sudden Blaze Last Thursday.

Shortly before noon on Thursday, June 4, a disastrous fire occurred in the abattoir owned by Gordon Ironside and Fares, in Winnipeg, by which damage estimated at $75,000 was done and the firm practically put out of business until temporary premises can be secured. The packing house and cold storage plant are in ruins and serious damage was done to the other buildings in connection. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

Shortly before noon the firemen at No. 9 fire station, before receiving an alarm, noticed the fire at the abattoir and went out to find the place ablaze. Extra help was called for and all of No. 3 station and the hose wagons and engines of the central station responded. When the brigade reached the scene it was at once realized that a serious fire was in progress and all that could be done was to confine it to the burning area. This the brigade succeeded in doing and the fire was out at 3 p.m. It is thought the fire started between the cooling room and the roof in the packing department, but no confirmation of this report has been made.

CROP REPORT FAVORABLE

Agricultural Department's Bulletin Tells of Conditions on the Fruit Farms Throughout Canada—Insect Pests Are Becoming Busy.

The Department of Agriculture at Ottawa has just issued the first fruit crop report for the year 1908. According to this the past winter was very favorable and there was a regular movement of apples from Ontario storehouses to the seaports, few of the apples being injured by frost either in storehouses or in transit. Nova Scotia did suffer a little, as a result of mild weather and excessive moisture in the atmosphere, rots and moulds setting in, particularly on fruit not altogether sound when stored.

The trees have come through the winter well, and are looking healthy and vigorous. Especially is this so in Essex and the Niagara Peninsula. Small fruits, too, weathered the winter practically without injury, and encouraging reports have come from Nova Scotia, Quebec and British Columbia.

The report credits early spring with being almost ideal for the development of leaf and bloom buds, the cool weather holding in check the buds until all danger of frost was past. Warm days then came on, making the "setting" of all kinds of fruit very favorable. The recent rains all over the country have greatly helped the growth and already the smaller fruits are in excellent shape.

Regarding apples, it reports all varieties promising well with the possible exception of the Spy, Baldwin and Russet, where they bore heavily last year. All growth is sufficiently early to insure a season long enough for the full development of fruit. In British Columbia, and, in fact, all over Canada, the bloom is abundant and fully developed, though in some of the colder sections the later varieties are a little backward; but in all cases the conditions are favorable.

The pear bloom is heavy, and the conditions are favorable for "setting." Trees are reported to be in excellent condition, though in British Columbia the Bartletts are reported to be somewhat light in bloom.

Japan plums wintered badly along Lake Ontario, and plum fruit buds are reported scarce in Prince Edward County. But the Japan varieties for the most part in the Province of Ontario came through the winter in good condition. In the commercial plum orchards in Southern and Western Ontario, and in the Georgian Bay district, the bloom is full, and the conditions otherwise are all very favorable for European and American varieties. British Columbia prospects are all favorable.

Peach trees came through the winter in excellent condition. There is a splendid promise for all varieties in the Niagara and Essex peninsulas. The majority of correspondents report prospects for a full crop. The bloom is more universal and somewhat heavier than last year. An encouraging feature is the statement by some correspondents that they expected to thin their peaches in nearly all varieties.

Cherries have bloomed full everywhere. There has been no winter killing nor early spring frosts; and grapes, too, have wintered well, look healthy and show an abundance of vines.

Of the small fruits, strawberries have wintered well everywhere, but will be a week or ten days later than usual in Southern Ontario and in British Columbia. Raspberries also wintered well, with the exception of some old patches which suffered from the drought of last summer, and in a few instances where canes were broken by snowfall. Otherwise berries of all kinds look good. The season in the northern sections growing small fruits is not so much later relatively as in the small fruit districts to the south. It is probable, therefore, that the home-grown fruit in the vicinity of Ottawa, Montreal and other northern markets, will shorten the period during which shipments from the south will be profitable. The indications are that raspberries will overlap strawberries in the markets, as the former are earlier relatively than the latter.

Tomato plants for the most part have been set from the hotbeds and cold frames. The warm weather and frequent showers have made ideal conditions for planting. The acreage for Prince Edward County and Essex is reported to be larger than usual.

It is a little early to talk of the insect pest, but the weather has been favorable for insect development. The brown tail moth, though well under control in Nova Scotia, is still a menace, and the bud moth is working in unsprayed orchards. Tent caterpillars are hatching out and eating the foliage in the Maritime Provinces. Quebec and British Columbia, and the tossock moth is reported numerous along the Atlantic coast. The green aphis and oyster shell scale have made their appearance in Ontario and British Columbia, but spraying has greatly checked their depredations.

MORE FAVORABLE REPORTS.

Dixon Bros., the largest merchants of Maple Creek, Sask., in renewing their subscription to The Grocer this week, in an added note say: "Prospects are exceedingly bright for a large crop in the West for 1908."

F. J. Blackburn, of W. G. Patrick & Co., Toronto, was over in the Fruitland and the Niagara district last week, looking over prospects. After conversation with E. D. Smith, whom W. G. Patrick represented, and other fruit men, Mr. Blackburn reports that the outlook for splendid crops was never better. The fruit growers are all feeling happy over the situation.

STUDY LOCAL CONDITIONS.

During the warm and sometimes depressing days of summer it is the custom of a good many business men, and retailers, generally, are no exception, to slightly relax their efforts along the line of getting new business. This is a mistake.

In almost every town and particularly during the summer season, when visitors are more frequent, and when local people travel considerably more, there are opportunities for developing business which have never yet been tried or even thought of, and which would yield surprisingly good profits.

This was brought to mind, particularly the other day, in hearing of a stationer in Rama, a small Ontario town. For several years this merchant has done considerable business in Indian goods such as baskets, ornaments and souvenirs. The business, through judicious direction, continued to grow and it has done to such an extent that for some time this merchant has been conducting a jobbing business in these goods and is reaping handsome profits, other instances of like nature might be cited.

Towns which enjoy the patronage of summer tourists or campers offer large opportunities for the development of special business. Such people are usually very ready to spend money and do not hesitate at buying fancy goods at good prices. A grocer, for instance, in a tourist section, might well find out the line of chocolates the people in his vicinity fancy and lay himself out to supply them. Again, if at a point of frequent embarkation for lake and river trips a stock of campers' supplies will yield good business. The travelers are always anxious to get their supplies as near their camps or rendevzuous as possible and the point incumbent on the merchant is to let them know that he can furnish the outfit. A good deal of this trade which goes to the city stores does so because they make themselves known and are able to supply everything the traveler needs.

Possibilities of developing this kind of business are unlimited and it would well repay any merchant who really wants to extend his business to spend a few hours in studying the local situation.

Continued residence in any one place, particularly in a small town, seems in a good many cases to blind merchants and business men to an appreciation of the possibilities offered right at his door.

WILL MEAT PRICES CLIMB?

The scarcity of meat in the United States and the reported increase in price are matters in which Canadians generally are interested. A week ago the daily press published a story to the effect that American meat in cold storage in London, Glasgow and other British centres was to be re-shipped to New York to meet the demand existing in the Eastern States. A day or two later a prominent official connected with Armour & Co., Chicago, corrected this story, but stated that there was a great scarcity of meat all over the United States, owing to lack of live stock supplies, and that in consequence prices would go up from one to two cents a pound. While the word "meat" has been used, it is generally supposed that "beef" is intended, but there may be a sympathetic connection between all lines of meat.

What Canadians are chiefly interested in is the question as to whether the increase in meat prices in the United States will affect the Canadian market? A number of prominent dealers approached on this point say this will not be the case. All agree that prices at present, both in this country and across the line, are too high, and if there is another cent or two per pound added to the cost of meat the demand will lessen, the buyers resorting to other foods. One of the foremost Canadian beef packers was also of this opinion, stating that if there was a sympathetic increase in Canadian prices, the raise could not possibly be more than a half cent a pound. "We are becoming less and less dependent on the United States for supplies," he said, "and so far as meat products are concerned, we are raising our own cattle and hogs in our own way."

Like the United States, Canada appears to be losing ground on the cattle and hog situation, and the Government, especially in Ontario, might very well consider how the raising of cattle and hogs for export and home consumption may be encouraged and improved.

Pork packers see no sympathetic feeling between the beef and pork prices, and point to the decline of live hog prices in Montreal, and the lowering of ham and bacon prices throughout the country as an indication that Canada is able to paddle her own canoe.

THE ADVENT OF STRAWBERRIES.

With the advent of the native strawberry the Canadian fruit season may be said to be really open, and, judging by Governmental and other reports from all parts of the country, the berry crop this year will be a record one, both as regards quality and quantity.

The plants wintered well and the late spring, while delaying the time of ripening, has helped the berry over the late frost period. Fruits in general this year all over the American continent are much above normal in quantity and of excellent quality; and especially is this the case with strawberries. Already the Niagara berry has been placed on sale in St. Catharines, Hamilton and Toronto, and, indeed it is turning out to be of very fine quality. In a few days the Oakville berry will be on the Ontario markets, while Ottawa and Montreal a little later on will have this luscious fruit from districts nearer home.

The conditions which prevailed last year are entirely absent this season, and there will not be the competition in buying at the growing centres by canning men and commission merchants as was the case a year ago. As a consequence, the consuming public will reap the benefit of a bumper crop at comparatively low prices, while the quality will be much above the average.

"Men Who Sell Things"

Classes of Fussy Salesmen—How Steadiness Counts—The Real Secret of Success—Change Negative Qualities to Positive —The Man Who Couldn't Fit In.

Well, now, your house acts on the principle that each individual employe takes part in forming that house. If your employer has forty-five salesmen in his house, and fifteen of them are good salesmen, who love their house and their goods, and thirty others who are indifferent and careless, then you see what sort of house he has—two thirds of his sales-force away from loyal duty and one-third hustling to increase the business.

With forty-five salesmen on the force and only fifteen of them active, that house has all it can do to look after those thirty invalids, and has no time to go out for new business.

Don't you see?

To succeed you must comply with all the conditions of your house. You might ask me: "What do you mean by conditions?"

Railroads carry you, for instance, on certain conditions. I know of but two—one is that you get your ticket; the other that you get aboard. And just as soon as you comply with these conditions, then all the speed in that engine and all the comfort of that coach are yours to your destination. And when a salesman obeys the orders of his house and backs them up with intelligent service, the success of that house is his success also. And the salesman must learn this fact.

It is not so much a question of who I am, but with what am I intrusted? There is a great deal in that.

Stand for the Best.

I start to cross the Atlantic in a paper box, and as soon as my box gets wet it comes to pieces, and down it goes and I go with it. If I start in one of those grand ocean steamers, then all the strength in her hull, and all the power in her boilers, and all the skill of her officers are mine, and I'll never go down until she does.

If I commit myself to my own weaknesses I am no stronger than they; but if I commit myself to the best there is in my profession, and the best there is in my house, I'll never do down until it goes down, with bright, energetic men pumping a constant stream of new life into it. Its course is upward, its sales increasing all the way along.

Just a word to the salesman of the Order-taker class, in whom there is yet a possibility of "warming up."

Business opportunities, like orders, are not waiting around to be served on silver platters. You must dig for them.

"The salesman stimulates desire and really sells something."

Arthur F. Sheldon, president of the Sheldon School of Business Science, and founder of the Science of Salesmanship, is without doubt the greatest authority on salesmanship of any time. To him can be attributed the statement:

"There are ten thousand positions today in Chicago which are open to salesmen of high grade at salaries that are almost for the specialists to name and take for the asking.

"Within it almost every man can find his place, provided he has that one thing desired and desirable—information and knowledge of a highly specialized character, wth a courage necessary to back it up."

CHAPTER V.

The Fussy salesman is generally visionary and a good talker, judging from the ease with which he dispenses the "silvern" article. Oh, no! a little thing like talk never troubles him. It oozes away like molasses from a stave-sprung barrel. Once fairly started, you might as well try to stop Niagara Falls as to shut him off. Control? It is as foreign to him as to a kite without a tail. The speed with which he can talk a customer into a sale and out again causes the Twentieth Century Limited to look like a snow-plough doing duty on a narrow-gauge track.

Talk is a mighty necessary thing in salesmanship, but an equally important thing is to know when to stop talking. And the most essential thing of all is to know how to talk and what to talk about.

The garrulous salesman is a blue-white optimist, seeing figures that exist only in the fluffy atmosphere in which he soars and soars. A few pounds of ballast accidentally taken aboard now and then allows him to navigate his airship close enough to reality in sales-making to convince the sales manager that he is not entirely shut out from view above the clouds of lost opportunities. In his futile efforts to "land" something worth while, he drifts aimlessly about with his drag-ropes out, lightly raking the field of opportunities over which he circles. If nothing goes wrong with the gas-bag, he feels that surely sooner or later he will hover long enough in the vicinity of a real proposition to permit his anchor to grapple and hold fast.

It generally happens that while this aerial performance is going on and his customer's patience is being tried with trifling things and meaningless sentences, Mr. Get Busy Salesman comes along and scoops up orders right and left under his very nose.

The salesman who wears his customer out with visionary yarns about himself and what he intends to do but really never does, will amount to nothing more than a putterer. He is a constant source of concern to his house, until, conscious at last that "the jig is up," he takes himself off to other pastures where the grass looks greener. He floats around from one house to another, until, to his dismay, the truth is at last forced upon him that the richest fields on earth are not for him to enjoy. Passing into oblivion is with him like the character in "David Harum," on the death of whom, his neighbors, asking what was the complaint, were told, "No complaint at all; everybody is satisfied."

The Fussy salesman and his Over-anxious brother are in the same class in many respects. Each in his own way fails to accomplish results. There is hope that the latter will eventually enter into an active sphere of usefulness on learning how to temper his anxiety with a reasonable amount of judgment by aid of the rugged road Experience. The former may as well quit where he is and engage in some other line of business.

Fussy Salesman Should Quit.

Zeal is an admirable and necessary quality in successful salesmanship, the excess of which rarely develops into a permanent or fatal malady. True, pitfalls are encountered now and then, but there is always a chance for the man with this failing, if he is honestly desirous of getting on in the world; while for the Fussy fellow there is but a forlorn hope. He never seems to know how to get right down to business in dead earnest.

GETTING NEW ACCOUNTS.

Every new retail business means a new account for some travelers.

The traveler who goes to a new prospect with a good line, and something of an introduction, has greater chances of doing business than he who goes with an equally good line, but as a total stranger. Travelers for houses which advertise in the trade newspapers are already half introduced. Their name and their goods are familiar to the prospect. He is willing to see the representative of the firm he knows of, while he will, often as not, turn down the other one.

At times I like to indulge in baseball parlance, adapting the expressions of those engaged in the finest of all outdoor sports, the National Game, to the qualities necessary in strictly up-to-the-minute business getting. Slogans of the diamond, such as "ginger up," "get in the game," "it only takes one to hit it," and "take a long lead off," are quite appropriate in salesmanship, and can be adopted with good effect.

Just here I am forcibly reminded of a character known as Fritz, who lined up with my home town baseball team. It was in the year 1905. The team was making desperate efforts pennantward. The securing of that much-prized "rag" largely depended on the batting strength of the team. In every other respect they were thoroughly efficient candidates for the high honor that every man on the team was struggling with might and main to secure.

Fritz, the catcher, was one of the best in the business, but when his batting qualities were in question he made an ordinary "sand-lotter" look like a National Leaguer. It was always Fritz's turn to bat just when a hit was most needed to win the game. His intentions were of the best when he walked up to select his club. Most likely Fritz had never been told about the place that is paved with good intentions; but the "fans" had, and when they saw him walk up to the plate their stock went down several points.

The moment Fritz faced the pitcher he was attacked with stage-fright, and danced up and down so that he could not get his eye on the ball to save his life. He just stood there like the Fussy salesman and fanned and fanned and fanned, until the umpire called him out on strikes. His long suit was "hitting the air," and he was never broken of that habit.

A good story is related of two men, both expert swimmers, living in an American city. Their powers of endurance were the subject of admiring comment among their friends, who induced them to compete in a swimming match. There was neither wager nor prize, but only a friendly contest to determine which was the better swimmer, there being an understanding that the backer of the loser should pay for a dinner for the whole company of spectators.

Steadiness Counts.

When the trial began for long-distance swimming, one of the contestants decided that he would force the pace from the outset. He shot ahead with vigorous, powerful strokes, and left his antagonist some distance behind. His friends cheered him exultantly from the shore, and shouted to him to keep up his good work. Excited by these outcries, he redoubled his exertions and increased his lead rapidly.

Meanwhile, his competitor was swimming with steadiness, with a stroke which he could easily maintain for the whole distance. He was not disconcerted by the frantic appeals of his friends to quicken his stroke. He was confident that his competitor was exhausting himself by over-exertion at the outset, and that the race would be won before it was more than half finished.

The two swimmers kept on without changing their tactics until the half-distance stake was not far away. The leader had ceased to gain upon his rival, who was beginning to lessen the distance between them. The first man was showing signs of distress, while the other was swimming easily and was apparently as fresh as when he started. At the stake the leader threw up his hands and cried out to his rival to come to his aid. The second man, calling upon his reserve power, forged ahead with a few strong strokes, and came up in time to save the exhausted leader from drowning.

"Help me ashore!" gasped the exhausted man. "The race is yours. You need not finish the course."

The weaker man was kept afloat until a boat could be sent to rescue him. Then the stronger man turned the stake and completed the course, swimming with the same long, deliberate stroke with which he had set out. When he went ashore to receive the congratulations of his friends he was apparently none the worse for his prolonged exercise in the water. His success was a triumph of judgment rather than of expert skill or physical endurance, while the other exhausted himself by over-straining unnecessarily in the first half-mile.

That swimming-match is a parable illustrative of many a failure in salesmanship and of many a successful career. Nothing is more dangerous than Fussiness or Over-anxiety in sales-making. It is the long, steady, deliberate stroke, with unused power in reserve behind it, that wins lasting success for the salesman, and makes him a candidate eventually for a junior partnership in his house.

No Secret in Success.

I once had a friend who worked his way up in the dry goods business from floor-walker in a retail store to the position of assistant silk-buyer in a large wholesale house. The firm of which I was a member was situated in the same block as the one in which he was employed. He came into my office one day and said: "I want your advice. We started together in the business race, but apparently you have been more fortunate than I, for while I am only a buyer's assistant, you are close to the head of your own concern. What is your formula?"

"No formula," said I. "Every man is the arbiter of his own business destiny."

I told him that fortune had not favored me any more than it had favored him; that I did not believe in fortune anyway; and that the only way in which the success of any man could be achieved was by "keeping everlastingly at it." I knew he had changed about considerably, and when he had seen an opportunity had not taken advantage of it. Finally, I frankly told him that I thought in his case retarded advancement was due to his restless disposition more than to any other one thing. He seemed disposed to argue the question, which I answered by saying: "In every large institution there are many opportunities for a man to make the most of himself in a business way."

"Opportunity," said he, "that's it. That is what I came in to see you about. This is my fourth year with my present firm, and while they are splendid people, I see no chance ahead of me for advancement. At least, it is a case of waiting for dead men's shoes. My salary of fifteen hundred dollars a year is inadequate for the support of a wife and three children. I have an offer from a large specialty house in another city to go on the road at an increase of one thousand dollars, and it's a sore temptation; yet I dislike to leave the old firm. On the other hand, the duty I owe my family is staring me in the face, and I really don't know what to do. What do you think of it?"

"Well," I replied, "you also owe it to your firm and yourself to weigh this matter up very carefully. Personally, I believe in 'sticking to the bush.' Your opportunity will come in time. I would not like to advise you positively in a matter like this. A thousand-dollar raise is a big thing for any young man, but I would certainly consult with my firm, if I were you, before doing anything. Put the matter squarely before them. Let them advise you. They will not take advantage of you, and will no doubt make it an object for you to remain."

He departed, promising to do that, but the next I heard from him was that he had accepted the offer made by the specialty house, and had left the old firm, where he was well regarded.

Two months later the head buyer of the silk department of that house dropped dead in the office of a New York hotel, and my friend's old firm was obliged to go outside for some one to fill his place, a position that paid five thousand dollars a year salary, into which there was not the slightest doubt he would have stepped had he refused the other offer and remained where he was.

Many an Over-anxious salesman fails to win ultimate success because he does not realize the opportunity that awaits him through conscientious, faithful labor and continued service in some one place.

Opportunities at Hand.

The calico-wrapper opportunity of the moment seems to obscure his vision from the sealskin-sacque opportunity of the future. He goes through life without any set purpose at all, with face turned away from the future and its rich possibilities, seemingly content to wander along, worrying in the present, anxiously occupied with a superficial survey of things to the right and to the left, but never ahead and beyond. He is like the man who was so intent on watching what was passing in the street that he failed to notice the open coal-hole directly in his path, until suddenly he found to his astonishment that he was rapidly disappearing into inky blackness.

I actually knew a business man once who was quite handy with carpenter tools and enjoyed his annual outings at his summer home tinkering with all sorts of odd jobs requiring the use of saw and hammer. It occurred to him one day to build a boathouse over the river which skirted his country place. While sitting on a scaffold directly over the river, he was engaged in putting on the finishing touches, and found it necessary to saw off a cleat that hindered his work. It was late in the afternoon of the last day of his outing. Desirous of finishing his work before leaving for the city, he was rushing things. Grabbing a saw, he began with vigor to despatch what he supposed was the projecting piece, and did not notice that he was actually sawing into the scaffolding on which he was seated instead of the inoffensive cleat. The truth finally flashed on him with a crunching warning, and the next moment he found himself floundering in the river, wildly waving his saw and calling for help.

It does not pay to rush things. The Rome of salesmanship was not built in a day.

It is said of the English General Buller that "he never went around anything that he could butt his head through." And he continued that course in the Boer War, bringing all manner of disaster upon his command, which caused dread anxiety to the home authorities until his recall stopped his mad career. He was replaced by Lord Kitchener, the tactician, who was obliged to overcome Buller's blunders before he could hope to win a victory for England's forces, which he did in the end by his superior generalship.

Concentration Wins.

The salesman who hopes to win real success must change his negative qualities into positive ones, and then stick to some good reliable house where his chances for growth are assured.

Returning from luncheon one afternoon, I was stopped just across the street from my place of business by a young man whom I had known as a boy, but had forgotten. Extending his hand, he said, "Hello, Mr. Moody! Don't you remember me?"

Failing to recognize him at first, I replied: "You've got the best of me this time, my friend. Your face seems familiar, but I can't recall your name."

"Why!" said he, "my name is B—. Don't you remember that we worked together as boys with the old firm of S. L. & Co.? You had the linen and whitegoods stock, and I had the laces, just across the aisle."

"Yes," I replied, "I do remember you now, but that's a long time ago, and many changes have taken place on the street. The old firm has retired from business, but I presume you are still in the dry goods line."

"No. I remained there but a short time after you left. I thought I wasn't suited to that line, and left to go into an insurance office. I soon found that insurance was not to my liking either, and then I tried the retail dry goods business for a year or two. Realizing that there was no chance whatever in a retail store, I entered a business college to study bookkeeping, but left the course unfinished on being told that if I intended making office work my life's aim I should commence at the practical end of things by taking a position in some large office, but——"

Not knowing where the narrative would end, but realizing that his story was a continued one, I interrupted him with—

"What are you doing now?"

"I'm studying electrical work in a big factory. No doubt there is a great field in that." Then, as if by second nature, he asked: "What are you doing now?"

Turning, I pointed to the wholesale store across the street which bore my name, saying simply, "I am connected with that firm!"

He seemed not to comprehend for a moment, but finally gasped, "You don't mean to say that you are one of the firm!"

"Yes," I said, "I am."

"Well! How on earth—" His face reddened and he did not finish what he was going to say. Instead he turned eagerly to me with—

"Can't you give me a place in your store? I don't get much pay where I am. Besides, I think that if I could get in with some one who knew me and would take an interest in me I could do much better." And then came the wretched admission that he was a married man and had a wife and two children.

I knew that his case was hopeless. He had tried and condemned himself in the story he had related of his wanderings but for old time's sake I asked him to call at our office the next day and I would see what I could do for him. We needed an extra man in the shipping room, and gave him the place at a weekly salary of twelve dollars—just double the amount he was receiving at the parting of our ways twelve years before. A raise of fifty cents a week per year for twelve years. Think of it! Yet there are many such cases.

Couldn't Fit In.

I heard nothing from him for a few days, and then one night the door-bell rang at my residence, and our new assistant shipping clerk was shown in. I greeted him half-dressed, as I was going out for the evening. In some surprise I asked him what I could do for him.

"Well," he said, "you must excuse me for calling at your house, but as you have been kind to me I thought I ought to call and tell you that I am afraid I cannot do the work you have put me at. I don't seem to understand it, and rather than make mistakes which might embarrass you I have made up my mind to quit."

There was something delicate in that halting confession that touched me, but realizing that his was a case for vigorous action, if the man was to be saved for any good to himself or any one else, I determined to let my engagement wait. Taking a seat by his side, I gave him a heart-to-heart talk, in which matters were not minced regarding his past and checkered career. I pointed out that he really had a good opportunity at last to make something of himself; that I would go out of my way to help him and advance him as rapidly as possible, but that it was up to him to do the rest.

Our talk seemed to bolster him up somewhat, and he left promising to stick it out and do his best. Two months, however, of worrying along with him, in which many interviews took place, convinced us that he was a confirmed ne'er-do-well, and we had to let him out to continue his search for something that "exactly" fitted his capabilities.

I never heard from him after that, but there is little room for doubt that the unfortunate fellow is still looking for a job, a sad example of neglected opportunities and a lack of stick-to-itiveness.

Opportunities don't often repeat; mistakes do.

The energetic, dead-in-earnest man creates confidence and success.

Don't let the self-satisfied and thoroughly contented persuade you that to-morrow's triumph will compensate for to-day's inaction.

To-morrow is a poor time to catch to-day's opportunities. Nothing great is ever accomplished without trained enthusiasm, persistent energy, and a determination to win.

The man who depends upon to-morrow's efforts is ever a pall-bearer at the bier of lost hopes and dead ambitions.

Results are the golden nuggets dug from to-day's opportunities by earnest endeavor and patient, systematic toil.

The faint-hearted man lacks the power to draw others to himself. He dissipates confidence, and fails utterly to secure prestige with those above him in authority.

A dead fish can float with the tide, but it takes a live one to swim against it.

Don't Shirk Facts.

In this progressive age a man's usefulness, like that of the postage stamp consists in his ability to stick to a thing until he gets there.

There is no use in mincing words. Let us look squarely at the facts as they exist, with a clear eye to bettering ourselves if possible. The fact is very clear and pertinent here, that we must meet our antagonists with their own weapons, hustle.

There are many salesmen in the world who persuade themselves into believing that to-morrow, next week, the week after, or next year will surely bring them the results they should have obtained to-day.

ARE FRUIT GROWERS UNREASONABLE?

Some of the Difficulties the Commission Merchants Have to Contend With.

The fruit growers in the Oakville district last week sent a deputation to Toronto to consult with the members of the Toronto Fruit and Produce Association with regard to the cartage charge question which has been causing some stir among the trade recently. The growers agree to accept the cartage charge proposition on condition that the commission men return all boxes, crates and baskets. To this the latter would not agree and the growers' deputation then went to Montreal to interview the fruit commission merchants there.

What the outcome of the consultation in the eastern metropolis may be is not yet known, but a rumor says that all the strawberries available in the Oakville district will be bought f.o.b. Oakville and taken to Montreal by one or two of the eastern men, they taking all risks.

The Toronto commission merchants when asked regarding this report ridiculed the idea and said Montreal could not possibly take care of such an immense crop of berries suddenly thrust on the market. An official of the Toronto association, in explaining the cartage charge, told something of the precarious nature of the fruit commission business.

The commission merchants in attempting doing everything possible for the fruit growers, have to neglect to some extent their warehouse business to build up a market where the railway deposits the fruit. Their men are at this market at six o'clock every morning awaiting the arrival of trains which may be delayed an hour or more. If a buyer arrives, and is told a certain train is late he cannot be induced to remain; and even if the train is on time the sale is made by the man having his goods first on the ground. Let us suppose a sale is made, although the sale is not complete until the goods are delivered—the fruit must be in the retail merchant's store by noon of the day of purchase if the sale is made that morning, otherwise the goods may be returned "too late" to the commission agent. In a city that has grown so rapidly as Toronto all this is a difficult task. Again, a day or two later the retail merchant may say the fruit was not good at the bottom, and an allowance must be made if the retailer's custom is to be held. All of these charges are deducted from the ten per cent. commission allowed the seller. Added to this the grower must be paid, a number of statements are to be issued, and even the money must be collected, items which do not at all trouble the grower. Heaped on this again is the increased cost of horses, feed, wages and everything pertaining to the management of the business, all of which have increased very much during the past few years. In spite of all this the percentage of commission remains the same as 17 years ago.

In regard to collecting and returning boxes and crates, the commission men say they do try to collect and return the larger crates, but it would be practically impossible to gather up all the crates and boxes. United States fruit and produce come in in much more expensive packages, yet the growers do not ask for their return, and the retailers might not return them even though they were asked. If the growers would look at both sides of the question, say the commission men, and see the risks involved, they would undoubtedly come to the conclusion that the cartage charge is a fair one.

ENCOURAGING TRADE WITH FRANCE.

Canadian Section British Chamber of Commerce Doing Worthy Work for Houses Here.

A letter to this paper from J. Meadow Smith, secretary of the Canadian section of the British Chamber of Commerce in Paris, is of particular interest to Canadian manufacturers and exporters, who anticipate doing any business with French houses. The letter says in part:

"The long existence of our chamber, and its experience of the conditions of French trade, will, we feel, enable us to be of great service to Canadian exporters who wish to avail themselves of this market."

Speaking of what the Canadian section of the chamber is doing for its members, Mr. Smith says:

"It offers the experience of forty years of continental trade, puts Canadian house in touch with suitable agents, obtains information on the commercial standing of French firms, notifies changes in French customs duties, proposed commercial legislation likely to affect special trades, etc. It communicates inquiries from French buyers of Canadian goods, files members' catalogues for the information of buyers, gives commercial and statistical information of all kinds, and aids members in customs and technical difficulties."

The chamber up to this time has done very worthy work along the lines suggested herewith and deserves every encouragement. Canadian manufacturers and produce dealers interested in trade in France should write to the British Chamber of Commerce, Canadian Section, 17 Boulevard de le Madelaine, Paris.

THE GUILD MEETING IN QUEBEC.

Indications Point to a Most Successful Gathering Next Thursday and Friday.

The meeting of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild in Quebec Wednesday and Thursday of next week, June 17 and 18, the features and programme of which have been referred to in detail previously, is being looked forward to with a good deal of interest by the grocery trade of Canada generally.

A large number of the Canadian wholesalers have signified their intention of being present, the programme assures a profitable and pleasant meeting, and the gathering promises altogether to be one of the most successful ever held.

HEAD OF SALT WORKS PASSES AWAY.

C. R. Cooper Died on Sunday After Six Months' Illness.

Chas. R. Cooper, proprietor of the Toronto Salt Works, died on Sunday, June 7, after an illness of about six months. An abscess on the foot, developing into blood poisoning ultimately caused his death. Deceased, who was 68 years of age, was born in Stanley Township, Huron County, and for the past 21 years was a resident of Toronto. He was the son of the late Rev. H. C. Cooper, who for a third of a century was rector of the Anglican churches of Etobicoke, Weston and Mimico. Mr. Cooper was an adherent of the Church of England and was connected with several religious organizations. He founded the Toronto Salt Works in 1886 and had been at its head up to his death. The funeral took place on Tuesday, June 9, and at the request of the deceased, was private. The warehouse was closed the two days intervening between Mr. Cooper's death and the funeral. Mr. Cooper leaves a widow, a son and a daughter.

HUNGARIAN BEANS IN CANADA.

The shipment of Hungarian beans, which was brought into Canada last fall by Toronto brokers, has been followed by further imports during the past week. The fact that representatives of United States houses have been buying extensively in the bean-producing sections of Ontario this spring has lowered the available supply very materially. Stocks of beans held in Canada are very light and prices are accordingly stiff.

The Hungarian beans can be laid down here at prices pretty well even with what Ontario holders are asking, and since these foreign beans are of excellent quality and the last shipments proved very satisfactory, there is prospect of considerable business being done.

The shipment which has already come in was brought from Buda Pesth and was shipped direct to the west, where demand is very keen. The Hungarian beans come in bags of 50 and 100 kilos, approximating 2 and 4 bushels. They are exceedingly clean and except for marked irregularity in size could not be distinguished as different from the Canadian variety.

PERSONAL NOTES.

Wm. Charles, the new member of W. G. A. Lambe & Co., arrived in Toronto with his bride on Monday evening, after a honeymoon trip, from Saskatoon. The happy couple are in residence at 21 Bain Ave., and Mr. Charles is receiving hosts of congratulations from his friends in the trade.

M. R. C. Howard, of the firm of Mitchell Bros., Ltd., of Glasgow, and Mr. Robert Mitchell, managing director of the celebrated distillery of Mitchell & Co., of Belfast, who are paying a visit to their Canadian clients, will leave Quebec on the 16th inst. for Glasgow and Belfast, respectively. Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, have for many years represented the Mitchell's Scotch and Irish Whiskies in Canada.

Quebec and Eastern Province Notes.

Great Activity in Halifax Fish Markets—Large Mackerel Shipments to American Markets—St. John Asks Government to Increase Harbor Facilities—New Ideas From Montreal.

ST. JOHN.

June 8.—There was very little change in quotations last week in the local markets. Business has been very quiet and collections are reported to be only fair. Butter is a little easier, being quoted at 20 to 24 cents a pound and eggs are offered at 15 to 20 cents a dozen.

The catch of salmon last week, in the harbor, was very good for the time of year and a good season is anticipated. The price now is 18 to 20 cents a pound. There is a deadlock between the Charlotte county fishermen and the Eastport (Maine) sardine packers over the matter of price to be paid by the packers for the herring catch along the Charlotte county shores of the Bay of Fundy.

The fishermen organized a union about a year ago, adopting a uniform scale of $8, $6 and $4 a hogshead for their fish, according to the season. At the annual meeting of the union in December they changed this to one price of $6 a hogshead, the season round. This is unsatisfactory to the American packers and they are endeavoring to break the union. The fishermen state that they will stand by the price agreed upon. On Deer Island, N.B., however, some have made a contract with the packers at the rate of $9 a hogshead until July 1, $6 to August 1, $5 to September and $4 for the balance of the season.

The city council has decided to send a committee to Ottawa to confer with the Minister of Public Works and the transportation companies regarding the future development of the harbor facilities here. The government will be asked to continue dredging operations and build more wharves so as to provide for the increasing traffic at this port.

The local government has appointed an agricultural commission, consisting of Hon. D. V. Landry, commissioner of agriculture; W. W. Hubbard, of St. John and Geo. E. Fisher, of Chatham, N.B. They will hold meetings in various parts of the province and report as to methods of improving agricultural matters.

The customs receipts here in May were $75,574.03, a decrease of $28,551.93 as compared with May, 1907.

R. W. McPherson, of the department of agriculture, Ottawa, was in the city a few days ago. His duties consist of detecting and dealing with adulteration of butter and cheese. He said there were very few cases of misrepresentation and that the standard of butter and cheese exported was very high. He gave it as his opinion that Canada has seen its best days in the matter of exporting dairy products as the cities are growing larger and home consumption is increasing.

HALIFAX.

June 6.—While it is a little early yet to make any definite prediction regarding the crops in Nova Scotia, the outlook at the present time is most favorable for a large yield. Principal M. Cumming, of the Agricultural College, who has received reports from various parts of the Province, says that this is a more promising spring than any other during the past four years. The season has been specially favorable to the farmers putting in crops. It appears that now a larger acreage is under crop in Nova Scotia, and it has been put in better condition than for a number of years. The dry weather has given the farmers extraordinarily good opportunities for seeding, and if the favorable conditions continue it will mean a good deal for the farmers of Nova Scotia.

The fruit trees throughout the valley are in abundant bloom, and everything throughout the apple district gives the brightest promise.

While there appears to be lots of butter coming to the market, the price does not come as low as it should, is the general opinion of the jobbers. Both creamery and dairy butter are in good supply, but the demand is only fair. Creamery prints are quoted at 28 cents, and dairy tubs from 25 to 26 cents. Butter can be imported here from Quebec and other districts in the Upper Provinces, and sold here with better profits than the local stock. The general opinion prevails that the farmers are asking too much for their butter.

Eggs continue firm at 18 cents. The demand is moderate, and the supply very good. Jobbers had been anticipating a drop in the price this week, but the quotations have not changed.

Fairly good stocks of potatoes are in hand. They have wintered well. Prices vary according to the quality, from 50 cents to 75 cents per bushel.

Large catches of fish are being made on the east and west coast, and great activity prevails in the fresh fish markets. So plentiful are haddock and mackerel at Arichat, C.B., and vicinity, that the fishermen cannot find buyers for their fish. These conditions are unprecedented. During the week just closed it is estimated that in the vicinity of one thousand barrels of iced fresh mackerel were shipped from Nova Scotia to the American market. The local salt fish markets are very quiet this week. The arrivals outside of one or two small lots of new shore cod have been nil.

Good navel oranges are scarce, and the price high. The best bananas are quoted at $2.50. Pines are selling from 15 to 20 cents. Rhubarb is dropping rapidly, and is now quoted at three cents per pound. Tomatoes, cabbages, spinach, lettuce and radishes are in good supply.

A delegation of Halifax merchants returned from Ottawa this week, and report that the Government will at an early date provide a flour shed at Halifax. This will fill a long felt want by the flour trade of Halifax.

After half a century in the grocery business, Robert Urquhart is retiring and he is now offering his business on Spring Garden Road for sale by tender.

The Halifax Agency of Lipton's, Limited, has just built an immense electric sign, which illuminates a large section of the centre of the city. The sign is fifty feet long and has been erected on the roof of the warehouse. It is the first sign of the kind in the city.

NEWCASTLE, N. B.

June 6.—The crop of 1908 in New Brunswick bids fair to be far ahead of that of last year. The season is at least a fortnight ahead of the spring of 1907.

R. N. Weeks opened a new general store in Willerton on June 8th.

E. W. Mair, E. R. Leed, A. W. Hay, A. G. Bailey and C. D. Johnston, of Woodstock, have been incorporated as "Cold Storage Co." The capital, $20,000, in 20,000 shares.

T. W. Crocker, fish merchant, of this town, launched the J. Howard, his new fishing steamer, on the 29th ult.

GEORGETOWN, P. E. I.

June 5.—There is little change to report in grocery circles this week. Business is only fair and collections are slow. Seeding is about through, and the prospects so far were never brighter for a bountiful crop. The hay crop promises to be exceptional.

Butter continues very scarce and fresh dairy sells here at from thirty to thirty-five cents. This is the result of high prices being paid for produce and fat cattle.

George Thompson, of Poole & Thompson, Montague, was in Pictou, N.S., last week superintending the shipment of a large consignment of potatoes made by his firm to Havana.

Owing to the scarcity of butter some local firms are making a special drive on jams.

MONTREAL.

June 8.—Walter Paul is in Winnipeg attending the meeting of the Synod of the Presbyterian church.

It seems incredible that weather conditions should have such a marked effect on business, yet such is the case. One dealer maintained that during the last few cool days the trade fell off fully a third. With the exception of the slight dullness during those few days trade has been very good.

Kingsley Harrison has sold his store at the corner of Burnside and Victoria Streets, to H. Girard, of the Co-Operative Grocery Co., corner of Guy and St. Antoine Streets. Mr. Harrison is conducting a business at 1018 St. Catherine Street West.

A bright idea has been put into actual operation in one of the large groceries of the city. This device consists of a miniature wire fence around the edges of a show table, on which all sorts of bottles are arranged. The idea is to prevent bottles being knocked off onto the floor and broken. Very frequently when reaching for one article another one is knocked down. There are other advantages which are plain to the grocer without comment.

M. Eichen, St. Catherine St., West, has incorporated a new feature in his business, consisting of cut and cold meat market. The new department is immediately behind the grocery, and communicates with it by large doors, which, when open, make the whole store into one.

The question of credits is always a perplexing one, and it is a subject upon which there is apparently a wide diversity of opinion. A small grocer maintained recently that indiscriminate credits were a source of sure disaster, while some houses seem to thrive on them. The grocer referred to in the foregoing is very careful, seeking only large accounts, and all bills must be settled monthly. To all but a chosen few, who buy heavily, spot cash is the rule. He maintains that in this way his business is not so great in extent, perhaps, as it might be, but is vastly more remunerative, relatively, than many businesses larger in size. He also states that what he loses in volume is made up by his peace of mind, which he enjoys because his business is sure and he does not have the worries that others do.

Walter Paul, St. Catherine St. W., expects to change the interior fittings of his store shortly, replacing the old fixtures by new ones from the Walker Bin Co. His branch store on University Street is fitted with the Walker Bin Co.'s fixtures, and they are certainly a great improvement over the old style.

In a small store, not in a fashionable quarter of the city, may be seen a stock extremely well arranged. At first it is rather difficult to comprehend the reason for this impression which takes root the moment you enter, but upon closer inspection the secret is plain. This grocer knows the value of "keeping goods to the front." Nothing is more disconcerting than to see shelves half filled, for instance, canned goods, with one label pointing north and the other south, and so on. This condition makes the whole store look unkempt and slovenly.

Fraser, Viger & Co. have a very pretty window display this week, consisting of picnic hampers, stocked with all sorts of delicious things. In addition is the usual grouping of summer outing paraphernalia, consisting of fishing rods, paddles, etc. The window is not overdone, but is simply and effectively treated.

News From the Coast

Bringing Bananas in From Mexico—Arranging for Large Fruit Shipments—Late Strawberries.

VANCOUVER.

June 6.—Slowness in the season on the coast is keeping strawberries and early summer varieties back. Some growers go so far as to state that the season is a month behind that of last year, and all agree that it is a good two or three weeks. Although it is past the first of June, real warm weather has been a rarity, and the strawberries now on sale are offered at 35c per box, an increase in price. A crate of locals arrived from Port Hammond the other day, but we have yet to have the Hood Rivers, which are only beginning to make an appearance.

The first shipment of bananas from Mexico arrived this week on the steamer Lonsdale, and are now being ripened preparatory to being put on the market. Local and Victoria people are interested in the proposition to grow and import Mexican fruit and vegetables, such as tomatoes and onions, and when trade has been developed there should be considerable business. The variety of banana which will be brought from Mexico, has a thin skin and is very luscious, and will make a good bid for the large trade now being enjoyed by that now on the market. The growers expect to do well also with tomatoes, and will ship them here in winter time, at rates on a par with what they are when the local crop is at its best.

Kamloops people are sanguine over the success of the operations of the Thompson Valley Canning Company, which is being organized, and which will have a plant running this season. The machinery is now on the way and will be installed as soon as it arrives. For this year, tomatoes only will be canned, but it is the intention to handle also corn, beans and such fruit as will be produced in quantities sufficient to guarantee an adequate supply. The stock is being largely taken up in Kamloops.

Attention is steadily being turned to the north, and prospective business locations are being sought. Revelstoke is looking forward to being a point of distribution for that section of territory immediately north and in the neighborhood of the Yellowhead Pass. One of the sub-contractors was through that city last week, inspecting the route to see if it would be cheaper to take in supplies via that city. With the railway construction going on in the north, and improvements along the main line of the C.P.R., with extensions in the lower part of the province, there is considerable activity along this line which will give business to merchants in all parts of the province.

A meeting will be held in Vancouver next Monday to organize a British Columbia Retail Grocers' Association, and representatives of district associations in Victoria, Nanaimo, Ladysmith, New Westminster and Chilliwack are expected to be present. Organization has been carried on very actively of late, and with a central body, the Association should be good and strong.

London Clerks Have Baseball Team—Barrie Has Lowest Butter Prices in Five Years—Galt's Official Collector Working Well.

LONDON.

June 8.—Wholesale trade continues to show improvement and the prospects never appeared brighter. All staples are firm. With retailers business was fair during the week, with another big Saturday.

The Retail Grocers' Association has secured Sherwood Hall, in the Huron & Erie building, Richmond Street, as a permanent place of meeting. Owing to the Wednesday half-holiday the night of meeting has been changed to the first Tuesday in the month.

The first half-holiday of the season was spent by many of the grocers at Springbank, where a game of baseball was played by teams picked from the trade. Secretary Cyrill Hayes is nursing an injured finger as a result.

The officers of the Retail Grocers' Association spent last Wednesday afternoon looking up the wholesalers in connection with the approaching excursion to Detroit. The response for contributions was liberal indeed, every wholesale house giving cash or its equivalent.

J. A. Henderson is now conducting the grocery business at the northwest corner of Colborne and Cheapside Streets, alone, Mr. Graham having retired from the firm.

C. F. Coates, grocer, in the suburb of Chelsea Green, has disposed of his business to Mr. Wright, of this city.

The grocers' clerks have organized a strong baseball team, with Clyde Hopper, of Harry Ranahan's, as captain.

Butter seems to have settled down to a reasonable figure. Twenty cents per pound was the wholesale price asked on Saturday. Eggs keep firm at 16½c to 17c. One wagon-load, consisting of 23,760 fresh eggs, for cold storage, was brought to the city on Saturday from Granton, and was disposed of to a local wholesaler.

The first home-grown strawberries of the season were brought to the local market on Saturday by Harvey Kilbourn, of Kilworth, just west of the city. They brought a fancy price. The general opinion is that unless June frosts intervere fruits of all kinds will be plentiful. Plum trees are overloaded and peaches also look like a big crop. Pears and apples never looked better.

A well-known local milk dealer is responsible for the statement that a combine to keep up prices exists among the farmers of the surrounding townships.

BARRIE.

June 9.—Butter reached the lowest point last Saturday that has been seen here for five years when an abundant supply was to be had for 13 cents a pound, and one large buyer bought the same article the day before for 12½ cents. No cheaper price than this has been heard of around this district.

The Barrie Creamery commenced operations last week, and R. A. Thomas, the proprietor, has seven cream wagons on the road this week. With three cheese factories opening the first of the week, we may now look for a good big raise in butter.

A thing which very seldom happens occurred last week when two of our leading merchants were closed. On Friday, Jas. Vair & Sons, grocers and dry goods, were closed on account of the death of Wm., son of Mr. Vair, and E. J. Armson's grocery was closed on account of the death of Mr. Armson's brother-in-law.

Jas. T. Walsh has sold his share in the Imperial Soda Water Works to Christopher Horsfield. Geo. Walsh and Mr. Horsfield will now manager the concern.

The other day your correspondent was in a certain store when a young lady came in very indignant and slapped down on the counter a loaf of bread wrapped in an old newspaper with a date of nearly a year back, and a very dirty, soiled appearance. She had been a good customer, but she goes elsewhere for her groceries now. It was a little thing the merchant thought, but one of the little things that count. A suggestion that I should like to make to any clerk or merchant is that the newspaper which is so often used, especially in wrapping bread up, should be done away with, and, in fact, never used in the store at all, as it looks very cheap for a merchant and has poisonous qualities.

At a meeting of the Retail Clerks' Association, held in the Council Chamber last Tuesday, Wm. Beatty was elected President and John Sommerville Secretary-Treasurer for the ensuing year. The clerks are going in for their seventh annual Wednesday half-holiday during July and August, and are arranging for excursions on these days with a good number of sports, and it now rests with the merchants to make these half-holidays a success.

INGERSOLL.

June 8.—Is it good policy for a merchant to actively identify himself with a political party? This is a question which one frequently hears during an election campaign, whether it be municipal or parliamentary. While the boasted freedom of speech and independence of Canada is something of which every subject is proud there is, nevertheless, the well-founded argument that as a rule business and politics are practically incompatible. The merchant who takes a prominent part in party politics must exercise good judgment and tact if he is to avoid straining pleasant relations between himself and his customers. No fault can be found with anyone who is sufficiently interested in politics to follow the affairs of his country and to openly declare his political sentiments. But when a merchant becomes known as an out-and-out partisan and discusses politics in and out of his store, is there not a grave danger of his business being injured? It is a well-known fact that many people are just about as sensitive in regard to their political views as they are in their religious opinions. This being true a merchant must exercise tact when political discussions are precipitated if he would retain the same kindly feeling of all. There are scores of instances where politics have precipitated unfriendliness which did not vanish with election day. This is something which all merchants should weigh carefully. Their best customers may differ from them in their political affiliations. Can the merchants afford to antagonize them for all the direct benefit they receive out of politics. Good customers cannot be picked up at any time of the day, and while the merchant may some time find it difficult to refrain from "speaking out" it is wise to do so in many cases. Election day is soon forgotten unless there has been unpleasantness to mark it, and then it is kept green for a long time. The merchant who has the happy faculty of avoiding political controversies or treating them in a humorous manner doubtless retains the good will of his customers and his place is never associated with politics. There are many disagreeable features about mercantile life. There is invariably a large quantity of the bitter with the sweet, but the merchant who treats all matters philosophically and forgets the worries of the day at closing time doubtless has more friends and is nearer to the front in the race for the nimble dollar than those who have had the "courage of their convictions" as some might term it, and spoken out regardless of the consequences.

In conversation with a grocer on Saturday your correspondent was informed that he did not expect to see the price of eggs get any cheaper than at the present time. For the past few weeks the price has been ranging from 15 to 17 cents with only an average supply for the time of year and a very good demand. If the egg situation can be correctly sized up this way it would seem that the old days of two dozen for a quarter have departed never to return. The increased consumption of eggs, which is accounted for by the increase in the population, together with the fact that many eggs are consumed on the recommendation of physicians, are given as reasons for the higher prices. For the past few years eggs have become one of the chief diets with many invalids, and as a result there is a constant demand for those that are absolutely fresh. The eggs are not allowed to accumulate in country stores as formerly as they are now gathered regularly by the exporters. Contrary to expectations butter is showing a decline. First quality is now retailing at 27 cents and choice dairy at 24, but it is doubtful if a lower mark will be reached.

This has been pineapple week with the local grocers and large quantities have been disposed of. From what can be learned the "pines" are coming in for more general use each succeeding year, and they are now recognized as one of the best fruits for preserving. They have been handled in very large quantities by all the local dealers who also know how to dispose of them. They have been well advertised, in fact, featured for the week, and the result has doubtless been very satisfying. The prices have ranged from $1 to $2, according to size.

A large addition to the splendid factory of the St. Charles Condensing Co., which is recognized as one of this town's best industries is an evidence of the importance of the dairying industry in Oxford County. The history of the factory here has been one of constant expansion. Year after year has brought about new additions until at the present time it is one of the largest and finest to be found in Western Ontario. The factory has a great many patrons within a radius of several miles and for the benefit of those unacquainted with its magnitude it might be worth mentioning that on Monday mornings as high as one hundred and thirty thousand pounds of milk are now being received, while the supply for the other days will average in the neighborhood of one hundred thousand pounds. But while so much of the milk supply of this famous dairy section finds its way to the condenser the fact must not be lost sight of that there are also many large cheese factories in the country districts Ingersoll has been aptly termed the "hub of the dairy industry" and the distinction is certainly merited.

BELLEVILLE.

June 9.—During the past week a new grocery store, on a magnificent scale, has been opened here by William T. Patterson. Mr. Patterson has been for the past sixteen years one of the best-known travelers on the road in the Province of Ontario. For ten years he represented the D. M. Ferry Seed Company, and for the past six years has been with the Steele-Briggs Seed Company. Mr. Patterson is an encyclopaedia of all the post offices and hamlets in Ontario, as well as Quebec, as his former fellow-travelers can testify. He was born in Ayr, in Waterloo county, and is proud of his Scotch Lowland ancestry. He has fitted up one of the most attractive grocery stores in the city, only a couple of doors distant from Wallbridge & Clarke. The fittings are in line with the idea that all conditions should be sanitary, and in this city the people favor such an idea. The Walker Bin & Store Fixture Company, of Berlin, have installed the fixtures, which are very attractive.

John Gregg, traveler for the Surprise Soap Company, has been busy here for some time. He and his aide-de-camps have been making a house to house canvass advertising Surprise soap. Nearly all the grocers' windows are tastefully decorated with advertising matter.

The good old pineapples are coming in in large quantities. The lowering of the price has been an inducement to the housekeepers to preserve their supply for the future. As an example, John Harker this morning received ten cases of pineapples from White & Co., Toronto, and in four hours there were but two cases left. The rest went later on.

John McVeen, of White & Co., distributed a carload of bananas to the grocers in this city yesterday.

Mr. Farnsworth, of the F. F. Dalley Company, Hamilton, representing "Two in One," was here on Tuesday, June 2. He reports trade booming. He also thinks Belleville is all right.

STRATFORD.

June 8.—One thing that strikes the eye of Stratford citizens and visitors is the much improved grocery window displays. There was a time when one instinctively turned away from the windows and did not wish to study what was kept inside. There has been a general awakening for the better, however, and now one generally finds himself unconsciously taking in the displays, which speak of good things to eat inside. One style of window display that is in general use—and evidently copied from one up-to-date grocer, is the fruit window. It is made by an adjustable sloping platform, slanting to the back of the window at an angle of 45 degrees. Rows of fruit are then placed on it such as one row of bananas, then one of pineapples, oranges, lemons, fresh vegetables, etc. The result is certainly a wonderfully tempting and effective display.

E. K. Barnsdale's new joy, a splendid new auto, may be seen under his guiding hand as he spins through our

That the usual Wednesday half-holiday should be discontinued this year was the opinion of the majority of the merchants at the regular monthly meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association, held last Thursday evening.

It is to be hoped that the merchants will hold together for better prices during the fruit season. Last year there was a general slash in sugar, and, as a consequence, the Stratford public were receiving two or three pounds more sugar than was going in other places.

Price-cutting is the thorn in the grocery business here, and is to be greatly regretted. It is to be hoped that this year there will be an improvement over former years. The price of butter took a tumble to the tune of 4 cents a pound last week, and is now retailing at 18c and 19c a pound.

PETERBORO.

Geo. A. Gillespie, of White & Gillespie, grocers, was the Liberal candidate in the Provincial elections for West Peterboro. Although defeated, he succeeded in lowering the Conservative majority of four years ago of 1,174 to 436. Mr. Gillespie, as well as being a grocer, is a cheese buyer on the Peterboro Cheese Board, and is prominent throughout the country in dairy matters.

The great problem before the merchants at the present time is whether the Thursday half-holiday, instituted last year, will be in vogue again. Last week a meeting of representative members of the Retail Merchants' Association was supposed to have been held at which it was decided to discontinue the half-holiday plan and to close their stores every evening at 5 o'clock during the summer months, except on Saturdays and nights before holidays. Other merchants claim the meeting was not a representatives one, and some of them are desirous of giving the Thursday half-holiday. No arrangement has yet been arrived at, and here the matter stands.

Louis Elliott, of this city, has a Wyandotte hen that recently layed an egg measuring in circumference 8¾ inches one way and 6½ inches the other.

The latest industry for Peterboro is a gum factory. The proprietor and manager is Mr. Joseph Berette, and the first product of the factory appeared on Saturday of last week.

BRACEBRIDGE.

June 8.—Robert Armstrong, for years employed by Kirk Bros., grocers, has, along with Andrew Gillespie, purchased the grocery stock of A. E. Hawkins & Co. They are pushing young men and should meet with success.

The high price of butter seems to be now a thing of the past, owing, no doubt, to the abundance of grass.

The grocery trade in this centre continues bright. Farmers are happy in the bright outlook regarding the crops, and tourists are flocking to the beautiful lakes, which all helps.

U. R. McDonald has accepted a position with Kirk Bros.

One good thing which is noticeable in town these days is the brightening up of the shop fronts. Merchants can go far in improving the appearance of all towns. Clean, bright stores, newly painted fronts and up-to-date delivery rigs add to the business welfare and also to the value of property.

TORONTO.

June 10.—A good many Toronto grocers are expecting to take in the excursion to the Muskoka lakes, arranged by the Retail Merchants' Association, for next week. The excursion will leave Toronto at 9 a.m. on Tuesday morning, June 23rd, by special C.N.O. train, and on arrival at the lakes the excursionists will have the privilege of taking any of the ten steamers of the Muskoka Lakes Navigation Co. to all parts of the lakes, although the steamer "Sagamo" will be specially reserved for the party. A complimentary dance will be given at the Royal Muskoka hotel on June 24, and that hotel will be open for the accommodation of the excursionists. Special rates for meals and rooms have been arranged for also at all the other hotels, and from present indications the excursion will be a huge success. The railway fare from Toronto for the three days' trip is $2.60.

To-day is the second Wednesday afternoon half-holiday enjoyed by the grocers and bakers during the summer months. Last Wednesday the holiday was spent in several ways, some going to the parks, some making little trips outside the city, and by quite a number at the races. To-day a good many will be seen at the ball game at the island.

W. T. Gilbert, who died very suddenly at his residence, 485 Broadview Ave., on Sunday morning, was a familiar figure in the flour milling business in Ontario for a number of years. He came to Toronto some years ago from Simcoe, and was about fifty years old. He had many friends in the city and was highly respected.

Mrs. Helen S. McLean has sold her grocery business to W. H. Fell. Mr. Fell is now offering the business for sale.

The regular monthly meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association will be held on Monday evening next in the association's rooms in the Temple building. The grocers are making great preparations for their picnic to Buffalo on July 15. Ben Panter and Bailey Snow were over on Wednesday making arrangements for the entertainment of the visitors.

For the Toronto Street Railway to enter a case against any other party is something rather new, and yet they figured in two cases in the Division Court last Thursday, in which Robert Barron, the Yonge St. grocer, was defendant and plaintiff, respectively. The company sued Mr. Barron for alleged injury to their cars through collision with his delivery wagons on two occasions, March 19th and April 10th. Mr. Barron entered counter claims for damages to his wagons. One case was awarded each party, though Mr. Barron says he could have won both had he cared to have witnesses subpoenaed. This seems to be a pretty good advertisement for the man who builds Mr. Barron's wagons.

The regular meeting of the Toronto Grocery Clerks' Benefit Association will be held on Tuesday evening, June 23rd, in their rooms, 1338 Queen St. west. All bona fide grocery clerks in the city are invited. The principal business will be arranging for the annual picnic.

THE VALUE OF A WELL-LIGHTED STORE

The Whole Interior Should Be Regarded as a Show Case—Light Helps to Display Goods and Holds Customers' Confidence—Means of Securing Good Effect.

One of the features in connection with stores which a great many grocers neglect, and one which will well repay serious consideration, is that of store lighting. Any grocer will admit at once that a store ought to be as bright and clean as possible and yet a good many neglect the first factor in securing this highly desirable result.

The highest value of good lighting comes, of course, from its tendency to show the goods well. Goods well displayed, some one has said, are half sold. In a good many cases the display does more than half the work. And in modern days we're getting away from the old-time practice of having a few sets of shelves built up around the door and the front windows and having the rest of the store in darkness. The whole store must be well-lighted, so that every advantage can be taken of the space it affords to display as many goods as possible. There should be no dark corners. Another advantage coming from a well-lighted store is the better effect it gives the customers. Light and sunshine, to some extent synonymous terms, ought to mean cleanliness, and they are very effectual in securing good conditions. In a well-lighted store whatever dirt exists is shown up at once and the tendency to keep the premises clean, nowhere more important than in a grocery, is mightily strengthened. The customer, too, in well-lighted and, what will assuredly follow, clean premises, feels an assurance in buying her goods which she could not in a dark place, where she isn't sure what questionable things exist in the dark corners or behind the shadows of the counters.

Light, too, and particularly sunshine, has its own cleansing and sanitary effect, and for this reason alone, a well-lighted store is advisable.

Where a store is isolated from other buildings, or even where it is built on a corner, the problem of how to secure desirable lighting is somewhat simplified for whatever windows are desired may be built in. There is somewhat of a disadvantage in this again, however, for windows along the side of a store take off a good deal of valuable space and are likely, too, to spoil the arrangement. In such cases smaller windows, situated near the ceiling, and fitted with one of the systems of light refracting so much in use to-day will, to a great extent, solve the difficulty.

In most cases, however, the matter comes down to a question of lighting the whole premises from the store front. In recent years builders are providing for this and are putting in all-glass fronts which allow all light possible to enter. While the ordinary all-glass front is invaluable in lighting, the front portion of the store it still tends to leave the rear, particularly in a long store, pretty much in shadow. To obviate this several varieties of light-refracting systems have been devised and are coming more and more into use, which are quite effectual.

The engraving reproduced herewith, which, by the way, shows the interior of the Kandy Kitchen in Guelph, one of the finest confectionery stores in Ontario, illustrates to a remarkable degree, the points emphasized above. In this case the light is all done from the store front and by the use of one of these refracting systems a most excellent result has been secured.

In considering the lighting of a store, either in a new building or in one under process of reconstruction, the idea should be kept in mind that the whole store interior is simply a large edition of a show case, and should be lighted, decorated and taken care of accordingly.

Montreal, June 10, 1908.

The past week has been a fairly good one, trade having been respectably brisk. The continued hot wether is leaving its mark on those markets which it generally affects. Dealers generally look forward to hot weather to give an impetus to the trade, but so far it does not seem to have operated in this way.

Sugar has been in a feverish condition for some time, but it is thought that it will settle down in the course of a couple of weeks or so. The provision market has shown signs of weakening by the drop in live hogs which has taken place. Vegetables and fruits have a tendency downward which is only natural at this time of the year. The same seasonable conditions prevail on the butter, cheese and egg markets, and so far they are conforming to these conditions. Other lines have not varied noticeably since our last report.

SUGAR—Canadian dealers are looking for another advance during the week owing to the fact that the New York market shows a tendency to be unsettled. It is stated this tendency will be exerted in an upward direction rather than a reduction. The market locally has been decidedly dull during the last week, and prices remain the same.

TEA—A cable advice note from Japan reads as follows: "There is no suitable tea procurable in first crop at 21c and under. Market is advancing and future prospect is high." It will be seen that this is somewhat at variance with the first indications which were for an easier tone. Ceylon, Pekoes and Ceylon Pekoe Souchongs have been in good demand, also a somewhat brighter gunpowder market. Prices have presented no new features during the week.

Advices from the Santa Clara Valley say that not a single prune will be harvested in that section and the outlook all over the prune producing country is not very promising. Prices have not altered any during the week.

RICE AND TAPIOCA—Continued hot weather is having an obvious effect on the tapioca market. The demand for this product has increased very considerably. Rice remains firm and unchanged. The large importers state there is a tendency for easier prices on forward shipments, but the length of time taken for the goods to arrive from the East makes buyers hesitate to order, and inquiries are being filled from what small stocks there are on the spot.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL—The demand for canned vegetables has not been quite as good as during the previous week but was satisfactory. Canned fruits, if anything, have been more active which may be due to the wave of hot weather, although it failed to have its effect on the vegetable market. Canned fish has been in slightly better demand, also canned meats. Prices for the new crop are not yet out and so far it is rather difficult to predict probabilities. There has been no change in the prices since last quotation.

TORONTO—Demand continues fairly brisk, particularly in fruit, and vegetables. Salmon also is selling fairly well, the hot weather stimulating demand a little. No more is heard of future prices and it seems likely that the old stock will be pretty well cleared out before the new pack goods is in.

Wm. Barret, grocer, has sold his business to Jas. W. Martin.

T. G. Beatty, 266 Spadina Ave., has sold his grocery business to H. W. Scott.

Wilford C. Cronk, representing the Lakeside Canning Co., Wellington, Ont., was in Winnipeg last week on a business and pleasure trip, and called at the office of The Canadian Grocer.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—
Sugar—Firm.
Prunes—Scarce.
Beans—Stiff.
Collections—Fair.

Toronto, June 11, 1908.

That the wholesale grocery business is getting back to a more healthy basis there seems no reason to doubt. Jobbers are more optimistic and wear brighter faces, and travelers, too, bring in brighter reports. The warm weather of the past week has stimulated demand in several lines, and it is thought that business will improve from this time forward.

The fact that farmers are, to a great extent, through with the pressing part of their spring work is causing a little heavier buying in the country stores, and the demand for special goods for tourist and camping parties is also having its effect.

The financial side of the business continues on about the same basis, with some renewals being made, but jobbers generally continue to exercise a good deal of care in these matters.

TEA—Local business continues to be of the hand-to-mouth variety, with buyers hanging off in the hope of something happening.

Thompson Bros'. weekly circular, dated London, May 28, in reviewing the general situation, says:

"The auctions showed but little change during the week, although importers have occasionally had to make some concessions in the prices of ordinary to medium descriptions so as to clear stocks. There has been a better demand from the country during the past day or two for all grades above common which has rather lifted the quotations, but the price for common remains at 6¾d per lb.

"It has been announced in the Times that at a meeting of the "Council of Ministers at St. Petersburg it was decided to repeal the Surtax imposed on Indian and Ceylon tea in 1903, from 1st September next," which should tend to bring back Russian orders to this market. Given the usual deliveries and a rather late season the statistical position by August must look very sound, and the first month or two's arrivals of new tea from India should come to a willing market, but in the meantime Ceylon and Travancore teas will be supplying the current requirements."

COFFEE—Business locally is quiet, more so, in fact, than for some weeks past. The recent action of the Brazilian Government, in making sales of valorization coffee in Hamburg, London, Paris, Havre and New York, just at the time when new crop coffee is coming on the market, came as rather a surprise and a drop in price was expected, but as yet this has not materialized, the Government offerings being readily taken up at prices offered. Since the Canadian duty of 10 per cent. on all coffees, except those brought direct from country of growth, none of this Government coffee, which had been shipped to foreign points, can be brought in here, and, in consequence, buyers here must depend almost altogether on new crop Santos, which makes the situation rather peculiar. Prices still remain stiff and under these condition it does not seem as if a change could be expected for some time.

SUGAR—The market continues firm and with the approach of the preserving season considerable activity is expected. Whether this will bring another advance is a question of interest, but a higher price at any time would not be unexpected.

Willett & Gray, of New York, say of the situation in raws:

"The week under review has varied from the preceding week by showing a decline in the European markets for beet sugars from 11s 4½d (equal to $4.40) to 11s 2¼d (equal to $4.36) and an advance in our markets for Centrifugals from $4.27 to $4.39 with the close at $4.36 for 96 degree test.

"The sentimental value basis is now 3c c. & f. 96 degree test, or its equivalent $4.36 landed, at which refiners have been willing to take all parcels offered, but will not make any movement to improve on this basis, and a few holders are better satisfied to warehouse their arrivals, for an improvement later on.

"As anticipated there is a renewal of purchases in Europe to a moderate extent for supply of wants to September, some 5,000 tons of beet sugar having been bought and a cargo of 6,000 tons of Javas from store in Liverpool for prompt shipment to New York the latter, at equal to about $4.36 duty paid, 96 degree test to the Arbuckle refinery.

"Javas for direct shipment are quite freely offered at prices varying as to position; June at 12s c. & f., equal to $4.35 duty paid; June-July, 11s 7½d $4.27); July-August, 11s 6d ($4.24), with a moderate business reported at the last named figures.

"The market here at the close shows a very satisfactory steadiness in view of the continued weakness in Europe which may be caused by the favorable reports of Mr. Licht on the progress of the beet crops from week to week.

"Cuba continues to produce some sugar on a few estates (11) as is usual at the end of the grinding season, but not materially increasing the crop in receipts. The visible crop of the whole island to June 1st will be at hand in a few days. Cables report heavy rains in some parts.

"Our special cable to-day from Java reports the exports during May of 21,000 tons sugar, including 11,000 tons with United States options, against 18,000 tons last year of which none were destined to this country. The weather is wet and harvesting delayed. The export of Javas to America during June may amount to 50,000 tons."

DRIED FRUITS—Prunes are scare, particularly in the smaller sizes, and stocks locally are said to be generally low. New seeded California raisins are on the way, and will be in stock in a few days. These are expected to sell about 2 cents lower than present prices. Most pessimistic reports concerning the prune crop in the Santa Clara Valley continue to come in, but dealers are rather incredulous about accepting these at their face value. THREE GROCERS' OUTINGS.

London, Hamilton and Toronto Associations All Planning Large Excursions.

London Retail Grocers' Association expect to take a trainload of citizens to Detroit next Wednesday, June 17th. Specially attractive arrangements have been made for the entertainment of the visitors in the attractive United States city, and an enjoyable time is assured.

Hamilton grocers are making mighty preparations for their annual picnic on July 15th. Last Thursday evening, June 4th, the Picnic Committee met in the association's rooms to complete arrangements.

President John Forth reported that a deputation had just returned from Brantford, where they had completed all arrangements, and were loud in their praise of the reception accorded them.

Arrangements have been completed with the T., H. & B. and G. T. R. for fifty cars from each.

Arrangements have also been made for the attendance of the famous 13th Band, Prof. Walmsley's "rube" band, the Italian trio and a quartette. Two Highland pipers have also been engaged and will be in attendance on the grounds. Other attractions are under way, and the grocers intend that the picnic this year will outshine all previous efforts.

A deputation was in Niagara Falls on Wednesday, June 10, completing arrangements there.

Toronto Retail Grocers' Association will also holiday on June 15 with Buffalo as the place of rendezvous. A pleasant sail will be made across the lake and up the Niagara River, and the party will be carried to and from Buffalo by electric car. Prospects are bright for a jolly good time and a large excursion.

A committee from the Toronto Association spent Wednesday in Buffalo, also making arrangements for the excursion.

The Grocer will have a representative along on each of these excursions to make note of the merry times enjoyed.

W. A. W. Melville, of New York, general manager for Thomas J. Lipton, was in Toronto several days last week looking over trade prospects. Mr. Melville is very optimistic in regard to business in Canada generally. He said that the Lipton business for the year just completed has shown results much better than were expected when the Toronto office was opened. The business has grown from the beginning he says, each week surpassing the preceding.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 9 a.m. Thursday, June 11, 1908.)

POINTERS—

Butter market weak and locally demoralized.

Canned strawberries cheaper.

Canned red raspberries cheaper.

Competition in breakfast cereals.

The outlook for the crop could scarcely be more favorable. In ordinary years by the middle of June the western farmer and grain buyer can pretty accurately forecast the season's crop and the general consensus of opinion this year is that the prospects were never so favorable. Were it not for the scarcity of money, the improved outlook would lead to greatly increased business activity; but, although money is easier than it was two or three months ago, there is still a marked scarcity of ready cash and business is hampered thereby.

CANNED GOODS—Strawberries and raspberries are cheaper locally owing to the heavy stocks carried over. Quotations are as follows:

WHAT A MAGNIFICENT OMELETTE

Fire in Angus Rose's egg store, Woodstock, Ont., on May 29, cooked one thousand dozen of eggs. The building was packed from cellar to attic with boxes filled with eggs, and a large number of these were destroyed by fire, heat and water before the flames were extinguished. The eggs were not insured. Very little damage was done to the building.

MACARONI TRADE IN CANADA

Consumption Growing Very Rapidly and Proportionate Demand is Heavy—Forms of Production and Places of Manufacture.

In glancing over the trade returns of the Dominion attention is drawn to the very considerable magnitude which the consumption of macaroni has reached in Canada in recent years. This condition is due to two causes, one which is very obvious and the other not so much so.

Naturally, the first reason for this increase in the consumption of macaroni is the larger numbers of Italians who are annually coming into Canada, and the other less obvious reason is the fact that other nationalities are learning to appreciate the value of this national dish of Italy.

The origin of macaroni is shrouded in the history of the Romans, whom we know were lovers of this form of food, and its origin may be credited to even greater antiquity than the Romans. For centuries macaroni and Italy have been almost synonymous terms. So inseparable have they been that the mention of one almost suggests the other; but this is not wholly the case now, since all nationalities have become aware of the dietetic value of this product as a food.

Florence Centre of Growth.

At the present time Florence and Naples are the centres of the Italian manufacture, but factories may be found throughout the length and breadth of Italy. Perhaps Florence, or more properly speaking, a town which is suburban to Florence, is the exact centre of its production in Italy. In this town the entire population of ten or fifteen thousand people are engaged in its manufacture.

While the greatest perfection is reached in Italy, owing to its favorable climatic conditions, there are now in operation many factories throughout the United States and Canada, which are daily making a superior grade that is said by connoisseurs to be equal to the Italian product.

Amount Used in Canada.

Last year the production in the United States reached the extraordinary figure of fifty-eight million pounds and Canada produced between five and six millions, and in addition imported six million pounds, which places Canada far in the lead in proportion to her population as a consumer of this product.

This condition is the result of the large admixture of French in our population, which are next to the Italians, the greatest lovers of macaroni.

Owing to the homogeneity of our people the national traits and characteristics in the tastes of one become the favorites of the others in a large measure, so to-day in Canada English-Canadians owe to their French and Italian-Canadian brethren the addition of this delectable food to their diet list.

A Variety of Forms.

It is interesting to visit a large factory and witness the innumerable forms in which this product is manufactured, and then it seems wonderful that the average person knows only of spaghetti vermicelli and macaroni, and, in the large majority of cases, these terms are applied interchangeably without regard to their real significance.

The small thread like filaments which one disturbs at the bottom of his consomme is a diminutive form of spaghetti, being precisely the same with the exception of size, spaghetti proper, being the larger. Macaroni is larger than either vermicelli or spaghetti, and is hollow, not a solid strand.

We are all familiar with this form in ordinary sizes, but our gravity would be disturbed if we discovered portions in our macaroni and cheese as large as a garden hose, and yet it is manufactured in sizes which would not make this comparison an exaggeration. In addition to these three comparatively well-known styles the paste is fashioned into innumerable small shapes and forms embracing every conceivable design.

As a Nutritious Food.

Another form which deserves especial mention is pastina-glutinata, which resembles very closely in appearance at least ordinary rice. Special research work has rendered this product the most important from a dietetic standpoint. Its value as a food made into various forms for children is undoubted and in this respect the medical profession and scientific investigators are bestowing upon it the attention which it deserves. Manufacturers of pastina glutinata are enthusiastic over its properties, which have been demonstrated by analytical analysis.

Six Canadian Factories.

At the present time there are six factories in operation in Canada, four of which are in Montreal and one in Quebec and one in Vancouver. At one time the Pacific Coast trade was largely supplied by San Francisco, but now Canada imports very little, if any, from the United States. One manufacturer was very enthusiastic over the possibilities of supplying the London, Eng., market sometime in the near future, which would be a great achievement when the fact is taken into consideration that the Italian Government pays an export bounty on all macaroni leaving the country.

Canada Has Best Wheat.

While Italy possesses climatic advantages Canada is to-day recognized as the possessor of the best quality of wheat for the manufacture of this product, so this asset may be regarded as a magnificent advantage, which perhaps more than compensates for the lack of perfect climatic conditions. Macaroni has been made in Canada since 1860, and perhaps the most prominent names connected with its manufacture in Canada are Catelli and Spinelli, as they have been familiar to the macaroni-loving people of this country for forty years or more.

Owing to high tariff none is exported to the United States or elsewhere.

Where it is Sold.

In Canada, the provinces of British Columbia and Quebec are the greatest consumers while New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia Ontario and the other provinces are buying in larger amounts each year.

How it is Packed.

Macaroni products are packed in one, two, three, five, ten, twenty and fifty-pound packages, of which the one-pound size is the greatest favorite.

Owing to the cheapness of labor there the product is somewhat cheaper in Italy than here, so that after freight charges are paid the imported article sells for a price practically the same as the Canadian product. Manufacturers are enthusiastic regarding the future of the trade in Canada. In any case it is of vital importance to the Canadian people because many ships from Mediterranean points carry back with them Canadian wheat which enters into the production of macaroni, thereby supplying a market abroad as well as at home for a great Canadian product.

Cheese and Butter Markets Stronger, With Good Outlook—First Shipment of Export Butter — Provision Markets Brisker With Opening of Shipping by Water.

Montreal, June 11, 1908.

The local cheese market is stronger this week owing to higher prices in the country which prevail. It is rather gratifying in looking over the Board of Trade returns to observe the steady increase this year's yield is making towards the record established last year. Certainly at the beginning of the season the outlook was not extremely bright for this year. If suitable climatic conditions had not prevailed there would have been a serious discrepancy between this year's record and the one established last year. At the present moment it looks possible to eclipse the last year's record with any degree of good luck. It is regrettable to relate, but, nevertheless, a fact, that continual complaints are arriving from England regarding the deplorable custom of shipping green cheese to the English market. Much discussion has taken place concerning the responsibility for the practice. Some are inclined to think the factorymen are to blame, others think the shippers are the ones on whom the odium should rest, but, in any case, green cheese continues to arrive on the British market, and Canada's reputation for fair and square dealing continues to depreciate in value. Shipments of cheese from Montreal during the last week amounted to 44,555 boxes. as compared with 21,591 boxes for the previous week, and 48,406 boxes for the corresponding week of last year. The total shipments since May 1 were 140,293 boxes, as compared with 188.930 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. Quotations are from 11¼ to 11⅜c this week. The Board of Trade figures show receipts week ending June 6, 1908, 48,208 boxes, as compared with 63,604 boxes for the same period last year, and the yearly records compare as follows: 1908, 143,506 boxes, against 191,808 boxes for 1907.

The butter market, like cheese, has been stronger during the past week, and from the same causes country prices went higher and quotations here followed in line with them. The chief thing of interest to relate about the market is the fact that the first shipment of export butter was sent away this week. The steamer Montcalm, for Bristol, carried 1,522 packages. Up to this time last year, 10,663 packages had been exported.

Board of Trade returns show receipts as follows: For the week ending June 6, 1908, 15,796 packages, against 12,908 packages for same period last year. For the season ending June 6, 1908, the receipts were 37,083 packages, as compared with 56,515 packages for the same period last year.

Toronto, June 10.

Conditions are much the same in the markets this week. The British market is still depressed and heavily stocked with Danish bacon, in fact there seems about the same story to tell each week. With this in view there is little encouragement offered for export business and the Canadian packing houses. With the opening of navigation and the outing season local demand is becoming brisk, but as yet the larger packers do not seem to have felt the effect of this.

Shipments of Danish bacon last week were again heavy, aggregating 42,000 cases. United States shippers have been easing a good deal in exports lately and their last week's reports show shipment to Great Britain of between ten and twelve thousand boxes. With these supplies the British market is pretty well stocked and there is little demand for Canadian goods at higher prices.

Deliveries have been more liberal during the week. An encouraging sign, probably the result of the farmers' getting through with their spring work. Unfortunately the hogs brought in have not been of the best quality, there being too much fat in evidence. Prices remain about the same as last week, viz., $5.75 to $5.90 f.o.b. and $6 to $6.15 for hogs off cars at factory. These prices should bring in heavy supplies.

The possibility of a market for Canadian bacon in Japan is opened in a recent report from Alexander MacLean, Canadian Trade Commissioner at Yokohama. Writing under date of April 21 he tells of the favor with which a trial shipment was received. as follows:

"An old-established purveying firm, here and elsewhere in the Far East, were at last persuaded to give a trial order for Canadian bacon direct. They had been getting their bacon from London and from San Francisco and they thought they could do better.

"I took frequent occasion to differ from them as to the quality. The English was too fat and soft, and the American was much worse. The trial order from an Ontario packing house, came to hand about Christmas, and when they discovered the quality of it, they kept it off the counter until the English and American should be cleared out. This trial order proved so satisfactory that further orders are to go forward, and it is to be hoped the quality will be maintained.

"England, however, is the principal buyer of Canadian bacon, and England supplies bacon to Japan; yet this Canadian bacon delivered here direct from Canada, costs from one to two-and-a-half cents per pound more than recent deliveries of bacon from London. And the bacon that this firm imported from London was no chance-of-the-market—it was a standard and choice brand. The American bacon cost about five cents less than the Canadian."

The New York Journal of Commerce, in its weekly review of the situation in the United States, says:

"The past week has been a dull, unsatisfactory market for hog products; receipts have been larger than of late at the West and equal to last year. Stocks on the first of the month showed an unexpected increase in everything but domestic cuts of meats, which made a slight decrease compared with a year ago, due to the fact that they are being used in greater proportion than then in place of beef, owing to the comparatively higher prices of beef than hog products, and are still held at the late extreme prices, with cattle selling higher this week in the West than before on this crop. The present prices of beef are, therefore, likely to be maintained until grass fed beef become more plentiful late in the summer and early fall. While the receipts of hogs have been larger the average weight has been declining, and is now considerably less than a year ago, which offsets in a measure the decreased consumption. But the latter has been sufficient to produce an increase in stocks that was unexpected. This has been due to the bad times, the reduced employment and to economy in consumption on the part of those employed, of which packers complain more severely in the beef trade than in hog products, as all classes of consumption have decreased, especially of the low grades.

"Added to the continued stagnation in the cash market and the increase in stocks, there has been no sustaining power except the shorts taking profits. The decline in grain has also helped the bearish feeling and depression, as well as stagnation, is more general in the trade. As to the summer supply of hogs, some think receipts are to let up soon, but the completion of planting generally increases supplies, and why it should not do so this year is not explained. The feeling in the provision trade is more general that it is useless to try to bull food products in hard times with high prices, when nobody will buy anything ahead of immediate wants, which are largely reduced by consumption. The only thing in the favor of the bulls is the falling off in the weight of hogs, which would indicate closer marketing than usual on account of the scarcity and extremely high prices of corn, and this may prove a very important factor before we reach the new crop, should the shortage in the corn crop prove as great as the bulls claim."

PROVISION MARKETS

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—The provision market is some weaker this week owing to a decline in live hogs of from 15 to 25c per 100 pounds. This condition may be attributed to the increased receipts from the Northwest and decline in prices for Canadian bacon in the foreign markets.

BUTTER—The local butter market is somewhat stronger this week which is due to the advance in the country. Another reason of the advance is the keen competition which prevails as much of the available supplies are going into storage. Butter is now being quoted at 22½c in large lots for creamery and 23c in small lots. Not a large amount of dairy arriving.

CHEESE—The cheese market fell off some during the week but is stronger now. The price in the country is firmer and that has caused a strengthening of the markets here. Supplies are arriving freely, a condition which it is thought will continue for some time.

PROVISIONS—An active demand has made the past week a very bright one in this market, and the dealers are in good humor for discussing things generally and for talking hopefully of future trade. Regarding the increase of beef prices in the United States, Toronto dealers do not anticipate any increase here, either in beef prices or in those of provisions generally, as Canadians are practically free from conditions which affect the United States.

Ham and bacon prices are a little easier compared with a week ago, and the season is opening up very fair. Lard is firm with little demand, and a firm market prevails in other lines.

BUTTER—An easier market rules this week and both supply and demand are very free. Creamery along with other lines has declined, but commands a very fair price compared with the other grades. Although ordinary dairy prints are quoted a buyer could not obtain any early in the week. Farmers are now putting up butter in pails and cases.

EGGS—The price continues to hold up and is the same as quoted for the past three weeks. The market generally, however, is easier, and there may be a lowering in price before another week goes by. There are more eggs offering, but competition in buying and the increased shrinkage during the warm weather is held accountable for the firmness in price.

Large Offerings of Grain and Light Demand Make Prices Easier—Business Good in East, Less Active in Ontario and West.

The larger offerings of grain at country points this week, together with light demand, has made the markets all round somewhat easier. The highly encouraging crop reports received from all parts of the country have had the effect of inducing the farmers to bring in their grain and this at a time when millers are not at all anxious to buy naturally forces prices down. Business in Quebec and the Eastern Provinces continues fairly good but through Ontario trade is dull.

Large supplies of wheat and light demand account for a slump in Ontario flour prices of from 10 to 40 cents on different grades, as noted below. Millers do not seem to be much interested in the market and under present conditions there is little possibility of any export business being done.

Business in oats and oatmeal is pretty fair this week all round. Some small shipments are going to British ports but this business is not noteworthy.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—There is a very good local trade. The demand from other points is good, but presents a difference in character, as the orders are mostly small but frequent, thereby making the total good. There is a marked absence of large shipments. Prices have not changed this week.

FLOUR—The splendid crop reports and easier wheat markets have had their influence on flour and a slump of from 20 to 30 cents was made during the week. Local demand is very light and millers report that prices will probably go lower.

CEREALS—Business is fair this week and demand is better in eastern parts of the province than in the west. Supplies of milling oats are offered very freely and as millers seem to be fairly well supplied and are not anxious to buy, this has caused a slight easiness in this line. Small shipments of rolled oats are being made to Great Britain. Prices are unchanged.

ONE-FIFTH MORE FRUIT IN B. C.

The secretary of the B. C. Fruit Growers' Association, W. J. Brandwith, Ladner, B.C., says one-fifth more British Columbia fruit will be marketed this year than last, because of the increased acreage under cultivation, and this in spite of the fact that 1,000,000 fruit trees were planted last year. The fruit exchange has a standing order from Australia for 30,000 boxes of assorted apples but the sparcity in quality and species will not allow of many to be exported. The English market is practically unknown as yet, although several tried shipments have met with success in the Old Country. The transportation difficulty is still a barrier, although the Panama Canal, when completed, may offer a cold storage direct water route to Great Britain.

HONOR SHOULD GO TO CRANBROOK.

In the issue of May 22 in the window-dressing department, an item descriptive of a splendid grocery window sent in by the Fink Mercantile Co., of Cranbrook, B.C., credited that company with being located in Fernie and gave the latter town the honor which should have gone to Cranbrook. The Fink Mercantile Co. carry on one of the largest businesses in Cranbrook and show not only a good deal of enterprise but also a desire to make use of modern business methods.

TRADE NOTES.

The assets of Ernest and Joseph Hemond, general merchants, Mont Louis, Que., were sold on June 5th.

Carscadden & Mullen, grocers and crockery merchants, Lindsay, Ont., have sold their business to John W. Lamb.

A. McDonald & Co., wholesale grocers, Winnipeg, are contemplating opening a branch warehouse in Saskatoon, Sask. This firm already have nine branches in the west.

At the request of the president and principal shareholder, S. Lachance, La Cie des Laboratoires S. Lachance, Montreal, has been placed in liquidation under the provisions of the Winding-up Order Act. In support of his petition for liquidation, he states that on account of the unsatisfactory state of business conditions in general, it is in the interests of the creditors and shareholders that the affairs of the company be wound up. The failure, however, is not one likely to involve any loss to those interested, as the assets are said to be in excess of the liabilities. The shareholders are nine or ten in number. Joseph J. Desautels was appointed provisional liquidator and the meeting of the creditors fixed for June 10.

EFFECTIVE WINDOW DRESSING

An Easter Grocery Window From Halifax Showing Several New Ideas—Electric Lights Made Into Easter Lilies.

C. E. Choat & Co., of Halifax, have forwarded for reproduction, the photo of their Easter window this year, which is shown herewith. The window is certainly a striking one and includes several new ideas which may come in useful to other grocers.

The company describe the window and its construction as follows:

"In the centre of the window is a large looking-glass, lying flat. On the glass, as if swimming, are a number of young ducks and goslings. From the four corners of this sheet of glass electric wires are carried to the extreme top corners of the window. Thirty-two little electric lamps, different colors, are studded about the window. The whole window decorations are white Easter lilies and green crepe paper. Piles of Easter eggs and fruit are distributed throughout the window. The background is filled with Easter cookies.

"We always use our windows to sell from, and by Easter Saturday midnight this window looked as if a cyclone had struck it. We were sold out of everything in it."

Perhaps the most novel feature about the trim in this instance is the covering the electric lights to represent Easter lilies. The window must be a large one and from that standpoint one that would be rather hard to dress to give a good effect. In this case the original plan has been followed out with good effect and with a commendable degree of uniformity. One attractive feature about the window is the excellent motto and price cards which are well done and add a good deal to the selling power of the window. That it proved a success as a seller is emphasized in the comment above.

AN EASTER WINDOW IN A HALIFAX GROCERY.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF WINDOW-DRESSING.

The show window, rightly used, is one of the strongest factors for attracting trade in the modern retail business world. To make the window pay, to make it a vital force in enlarging a business by constantly drawing new customers into the store, requires time and labor, and the exercise of good taste and judgment. If a merchant buys advertising space in a newspaper or elsewhere he devotes considerable thought to filling it with attractive matter. He makes frequent changes so that his advertisements are always new and fresh and suited to the varying needs of the buying public. The show window is a valuable advertising space which costs the merchant something in rent and other expenses. He has it on his hands and can turn it to good account or he can neglect it, letting it remain a constant bill of expense from which he derives no benefit.

The slovenly show window knocks business. It drives away trade. It deters many from entering who fear to find the interior as poorly managed as the exterior. The show window is an index to the store. A neat, tasty display, with goods shown to their best advantage, indicates a well-kept, businesslike establishment. The customer who enters and finds that the interior bears out the promises made by the window display goes away satisfied and is sure to return. Constant changes in the window will keep the world informed of the changes going on within the store, the new bargains, the beginning of special sales and the arrival of new goods.

The object of all good window trimming is first to draw spectators to the window, then to hold their attention, and finally induce them to enter the store. For this reason every trim should have some novel feature, unique in itself, and belonging peculiarly to the exhibit of which it is a part. Any unusual arrangement of the goods in hand will attract attention. The massive style, in which a large number of the same article are grouped in a window, or at a particular spot, is often effective. For variety use the light, delicate style, in which a few objects are grouped in a graceful, artistic fashion which compels attention and admiration. Set pieces, in which various objects are used to create outdoor scenes or other pictorial effects, can be used in thousands of varieties and to good advantage. Articles in motion will invariably draw spectators to a window. A flag waving in a breeze created by a concealed electric fan, a windmill operated by motor, or mechanically moving lights, are commonly used to good purpose. The idea can be employed in a thousand different ways. Special exhibits, such as cooking, the making of shoes or weaving of rugs, in which the construction or use of the article advertised is shown in actual operation, are sure means of obtaining publicity if not used too often.—Show Card Writer.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Canadian Strawberries Arriving—Imported Peaches a New Line—Potato Prices Tumbling—Tomatoes of Good Quality—Large Sales of Fish.

Canadian small fruits are beginning to arrive, strawberries from the Niagara district having made their appearance on the Toronto market, and are expected to be placed on sale in Montreal in a few days. By the end of next week the various centres of the country will be handling this luscious little berry, which grows so plentifully in various sections of Canada. Strawberries and all Canadian fruits are said to be more than ordinarily plentiful this year and the markets should be very active all summer.

Oranges, lemons, pines and bananas are going out well—in fact the fruit business now being done is more than eclipsing that of last year, and the fruit men are consequently found in a very grateful mood.

Potatoes and tomatoes are the prominent lines in vegetables, the former declining somewhat in price both on account of the new grades offering and also because the stocks are accumulating on the dealers' hands. Tomatoes are of fine quality this year. As yet only the imported variety has been arriving; but if the Canadian stock compares at all with this grade a very good business season in this line may be expected. The fish of various kinds now offering are fresh caught lines—fresh water fish and fresh sea fish. A very encouraging business is being done all over the country, and it is not at all unusual to see some dealers clean out their daily supply before the noon hour arrives.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—The fruit trade is very brisk just now, owing to the warm weather, which has a beneficial effect upon this market. While the best grade of lemons remain at the same price, there are other grades offering at much reduced figures, as compared with last week's quotations. Valencia oranges have declined for best brands; likewise pineapples are a little cheaper. Other lines remain the same as at the last quotation. California summer fruits, plums, peaches, apricots, will be arriving now in a fortnight. First receipts are anxiously awaited.

VEGETABLES—Vegetables have not shown as much change in price during the last week as might have been expected for this time of the year. Florida tomatoes have dropped considerably, being now quoted at $3 to $3.50, instead of $4 to $4.50, as last week. New cabbages have declined 25c, and new potatoes are worth $4.50, instead of $5, as at the last quotation. The demand is excellent, which is largely responsible for the firm tone of the market.

FISH—The fish market has sustained a few declines during the last week, among which are haddock, mackerel and Gaspe salmon. Mackerel is down the lowest it has been during the season. Cod is in good supply also haddock. There has been a scarcity of brook trout, but it is expected these fish will arrive freely very soon. Lake fish, such as dore, trout and whitefish, are arriving in good quantities. Gaspe salmon is much lower this week. Demand has been good.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—The warm weather is making business very brisk, and already a larger volume of trade is being done than last year. This speaks well for the financial condition of the country, and gives a black eye to the depression we have been hearing so much about of late. Pineapples and bananas continue to be the staple articles, and oranges and strawberries are interesting features. Navels are about done (this week will see the last of them), but California late Valencias are taking their place. Canadian strawberries are now on the market—in small lots, however—but by Saturday they will be here in fairly large quantities, and by next week a bumper business should be doing. Texas peaches are the new line, and California peaches, plums and apricots are expected along in a few days.

VEGETABLES — Potatoes are the most talked of line this week. Although not coming in very freely, the offerings are considerably more than the demand. Dealers are fully stocked up and prices have come down accordingly. Various prices are given ranging all the way from 75 cents for Ontario to $1.10 for Delawares. The drop in the price of imported new potatoes, too, has much to do with the easing up of the potato market. Some of the Canadian early vegetables have declined in price and asparagus is almost off.

FISH—But one price change is noted—haddock has dropped a cent, and is now quoted at six cents a pound. Cod, although still on the list, is not to be had in town, and from advices received from Montreal they are not to be had, very few of them being caught. The fresh water lines are still going out very well, and business in general is more than fair.

LOBSTERS DOING WELL.

Experiment of Transplanting to Pacific Coast Seems Successful.

Despatches from Vancouver state that the big consignment of lobsters which was recently sent from the Maritime Provinces to Vancouver, with the object of establishing lobster colonies along the Pacific coast, have now been turned loose to forage for themselves in the sea. When the lobsters reached Vancouver they were met by Dominion fisheries inspectors and transferred to open crates, in which they were kept in the sea for some time until they were adjudged fit to get out and hustle for themselves.

In turning them loose all "burled" lobsters, or those bearing spawn, were retained in the crates, in order that the progress of their breeding might be noted. The rest were set free at various protected bays up the coast. It is expected that the freed lobsters will hew out homes for themselves in their virgin territory, as they are great travelers, and have been known to journey as far as two hundred miles in search of suitable locations. Mr. Taylor, one of the fisheries inspectors, reports that the lobsters have done very well since arriving at the Pacific ocean, and there is every probability of the transplanting experiment proving a complete success.

GROCERY FACTS.

Useful Information for the Merchants and Clerks About the Things They Sell.

HOW GINGER IS RAISED—Ginger in the quantity produced and consumed probably ranks next in importance to pepper among spices used by man. It is a pungent, aromatic spice, largely used in confectionery, as a dessert dish by itself, and in medicines. This plant, indigenous to Asia, has been introduced into many tropical countries, where it flourishes under cultivation. A large amount is grown in India, but Jamaica now ranks high as a producing country, and Jamaica ginger is a regular trade term. Besides the East and West Indies, British West Africa, Queensland, Siam, China, and Brazil are producing countries. Siamese and Chinese ginger are identical, but are from another plant, reaching a height of four or five feet. It is quite possible that zingiber is grown to some extent as well, as some of the so-called Chinese ginger, preserved in jars, is reported to be the preserved young shoots of an edible bamboo, though this seems doubtful as the ginger plant is so common.

Heat, moisture, and a good soil are the plant's main requirements, for it is quite a tropical subject. It needs a rainfall of 800 to 1,000 inches per annum, although it is grown in some districts where the fall is as low as 150 to 200 inches a year; but where the rainfal is not sufficiently well distributed, irrigation answered well. The soil cannot be too good for ginger, which is rather an exhausting crop.

Ginger planting is much like potato planting. In March or April the divided tubers or fingers, each containing an "eye,' 'are planted in trenches in the prepared soil about a foot apart. Cultivating the soil is carried on, and it needs must be supplied regularly while the plant is in growth. It is a grass or reed-like plant, reaching a height of four or five feet, and the plantation when in full blossom is an attractive sight. The blossoming takes place in September, and in the following December-January the crop is ready for digging. The flowers wither and die, and then the foliage and stems follow suit. This is the time when the root is fully developed and fit for lifting.

The swollen roots, or rather rhizomes as they really are, are dug up with a fork; this must be done with care so as not to break or bruise the "hands." The tubers are piled in heaps, the small, fibrous roots are taken off, and the soil is removed. This must be done speedily before the soil dries, or the ginger will not preserve its white color. It is then thrown into a tank of water preparatory to peeling.

Peeling ginger is a process requiring practice on the part of the laborers. The "hands" are carefully peeled with a narrow-bladed knife, and special care is required to do the portions between the "fingers." The importance of proper peeling will be seen from the following quotation:

"Examination of a transverse section of ginger will show that there is an outer striated skin, under which there are numerous oil cells, the oil cells being numerous at the bud points. The oil obtained from these cells in specimens obtained fresh from the ground is almost colorless, very pungent, and exceedingly aromatic. It becomes yellow very quickly, on exposure to the air and even upon drying, without removal of the epidermis, its delicate aroma is found to be fleeting. On drying the ginger the contents of these cells appear as a yellow, pitchy mass. As this dark layer is the seat of the greatest amount of oil and resin cells, it will readily be seen that the deeper the peeling so much the more of these substances wil be carried away with the epidermis and more cells opened from which these principles may exude.'

After peeling, the ginger is again placed in clean water and very thoroughly washed. If the roots are left to soak in water they lose some of their aroma, and if washed in running water they are cured lighter in color.—The Storekeeper.

GOOD PROSPECTS IN ALBERTA.

John Horne, manager of Campbell, Wilson & Horne, wholesale grocers, Calgary, was in Winnipeg recently, consulting with the management of Campbell, Bros. & Wilson. To a Canadian Grocer representative, Mr. Horne spoke very optimistically of business conditions and prospects in Sunny Alberta. The crops are about five weeks ahead of last year, and as the acreage is very largely increased the outlook for big returns next fall is particularly bright.

Mr. Horne returned to Calgary early this week.

ANOTHER DEATH

The Retailers' Journal, of Chicago, for May contains a graphic account of another horrible, fatal accident from explosion of inflammable liquid stove polish.

Think of the suffering which intervened before the death from burns, during hours of agony. You can't afford to deal out over your counter these frightfully dangerous liquids.

RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes and SUN PASTE Stove Polish in Tins are perfectly safe. Push them. They give the greatest possible satisfaction, and you please a customer every time you sell a package of either.

"The Best is None Too Good."

ESTABLISHED 1879

That being the motto of millions of consumers, how necessary it is for the seller to be prepared to suit them.

Those who ignore this suggestion often wonder why "the other fellow" gets their trade.

But the "knowing ones" know why it is.

The medium between the highest and the doubtful is a dangerous one for the Grocer.

You want goods that will not only create, but will HOLD trade; and that is precisely what do and have been doing for many years.

"Time is fleeting," says the old adage; we may add: So is trade in haphazard Coffee.

More About Peas

Some people imagine that Canadian packed Peas are not as good as peas from France. There was never a greater fallacy. French Peas are largely packed from seed grown in Canada. If you will compare the Canadian with the French pack Peas you will notice that the flavor of the imported Peas is killed by the use of green coloring.

A prominent grocer said that he never ate any Peas but the imported. He was asked if he had ever compared the French with the Canadian Peas. He confessed that he never had. A tin of very ordinary Canadian Standard Peas two or three years old was then opened against a tin of French Peas. The French Peas had the Canadian Peas beaten for color, but for flavor the Canadian pack Peas were much superior, and had a flavor that was entirely lacking in the French Peas. In fact the French Peas were quite unpalatable.

The Canadian Canners' Canned Peas are the finest in the world. They have the field to themselves as regards quality.

Talk Quality in Peas, and educate your customers to buy the better grades. Show them wherein the difference lies. It will pay you well.

The difference in cost is slight, and you can obtain a much larger profit on the better grades.

Try it for one week. Talk Canadian Canners' Sweet Wrinkle Peas at every opportunity, and note the results.

That's the kind we make—beautiful long threads that will satisfy the most exacting.

An important point, too, is that it does not cost you any more—perhaps not as much—than inferior and poorly-made cocoanut.

Profitable Goods

Are the goods that are a little better than the others: goods that will make sales where the others won't. Ozo Brand Pickles are good pickles, and show their quality. We have special facilities for turning out the best pickles, and we have made the most of them. For instance, we provide the seed from which the vegetables are grown and so get the best from the start; the cucumbers go straight from the vine to the factory, so that none of the fresh crispness is lost. We make our own vinegar and it cannot be beaten for pickling purposes. It will certainly pay you to specify that you want our goods when ordering pickles.

The Relations of Canner and Jobber

Address by President of National Canners Association of United States at Recent Convention of United States Wholesale Grocers—Bears on Similar Conditions in Canada.

Among the many points of interest at the recent convention of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association at Atlantic City, referred to at length in these columns last week, perhaps none was of more import than the address by C. S. Crary, president of the National Canners' Association, on "The Relations of the Canner and Jobber and ways in which they can Co-operate to Mutual Advantage."

While neither the canners nor the jobbers are so comprehensively organized as in the United States, conditions here are to a large extent similar to those in existence across the line, and Mr. Crary's address should, accordingly, be of interest to the Canadian trade generally. It is given substantially herewith.

Relations Closely Identified.

"The relations of the canned goods packing industry to the wholesale grocery trade is so close and the interests of the two organizations are so closely identified that a member of either cannot well trust himself to speak in criticism of the other, but would better confine himself to those points of general interest to both.

"It was a good many years before the rivalry in the canning business would permit of a national organization, covering as it does practically all of the fruit and vegetable packers from Maine to California. And it is only of very recent years that the wholesale grocers seemed to find sufficient ground for the bringing about of the splendid organization you have now effected.

"The desire for closer communion between the National Canners' and the National Wholesale Grocers' Associations and to insure as nearly as possible a complete affiliation working for the common interests of both has produced your invitation to me to be with you. The tendency is to a closer relationship in all lines of business, and the jobber and packer should, in no sense, be competitors. Yours is the logical organization which the packer seeks as the natural channel through which to accomplish the distribution of his products, and the packer can better afford to pay you a reasonable profit for this distribution than to attempt it himself. Organization is for the benefit and protection of the individual, and this is true in business as well as in social work. Society and business associations are socialistic in their purposes, and are not organized for individual profit.

Limits Jobbers to Distribution.

"The wholesale grocer has elected to be the important middleman in the distribution of food products between the manufacturer and the consumer. He has constituted himself as the logical clearing house for the packers' products, and the packer, recognizing the benefits of the jobbers' well organized system of distribution, will avail himself of it just so long as the toll charged is a reasonable one, and just so long as the jobber confines himself to the business of distribution and does not enter the field as a competitor of the packer. When a packer has seen his own trade on a given brand of goods dwindle from year to year, finally to be displaced entirely by the jobbers' brand, the reputation of which has been built up by the assurance that it is 'just as good,' he at last awakens to the fact that he should confine his efforts exclusively either to his own brands or that of the jobber, and if he decides to handle his own this means a reorganization of the selling end of his business and the establishment of his own plan for distribution.

"A close relationship between the individual packer and jobber exists only by virtue of their co-operation in the distribution of the packer's brands. Take away that relationship and the packer has lost the incentive for enthusiasm and painstaking effort. When a man identifies himself with any business, if that business is to get the best there is in him, he enters upon it as a life business, and to make it amount to anything must build for himself.

Assurance Better Than Contracts.

"The personality of the seller and his known disposition to meet his contracts fairly are in reality more vital to you than the contract itself. The contract committee from your association which did us a visit in Cincinnati last February was, doubtless, disappointed, because there was not shown a keener disposition on the part of the canners to agree with them on a uniform contract.

"There seemed to be a feeling prevalent among the canners that the matter of contracts was largely a personal one, and for that reason that it would be quite impossible to get together on important points.

"The selling of goods by a packer under his own label and the buying of goods by a jobber unlabeled are two entirely separate and distinct propositions.

"No particular form or contract could be established as a hard and fast rule.

"The packer who puts out a line of fancy goods under his own brand always knows that the quantity of high grade stock he is to harvest is uncertain, and there should certainly be no criticism on the part of the distributor if he cares to handle the packer's goods at all, in taking them on a pro rata contract.

"The question of the lack of good faith in making deliveries under pro rata contracts on packers' brands does not arise as it would if the goods were bought unlabelled, because the buyer knows that the packer will strain every point to the care of his own trade name.

"Now, the jobber wishes to buy goods for his label and naturally he is the one to take the initiative in the transaction. He wants a given quantity of goods, and it is just as much out of reason for the packer to attempt to change this buyer's specifications as to his requirements as it is for the jobber to attempt to dictate to the packer how and under what form of contract he should sell his goods.

"If seller is willing to contract for the delivery of 10,000 cases of standard goods on a contract with 80 per cent. delivery guaranteed, then instead, let the contract be placed for 8,000 cases with a guarantee of full delivery, and make a closed contract of it.

An Easy Way to Consumer.

"We are all seeking, or should seek, the simplest methods of getting from the garden and field to the consumer, and in doing this we are prone to work along lines of elimination that always eliminate the other fellow, always feeling sure of the necessity and usefulness of our own commercial existence.

"While the practice od dealing in futures is being assailed, there will be those who condemn it, but a very large percentage of the business of the country will continue to be done by those who plan for to-morrow and next week and next year, and in doing it they will continue to make and keep their future contracts as usual.

"The strongest reason for organization in the canning industry is that it enables us to work out plans along lines of development, which are always looking to an increased consumption of canned goods.

"Quality itself is the best advertisement and recommendation to the consumer for a repetition of his order. There is no better way in which the wholesale grocer can help this matter along than by continually insisting upon a good quality of product, and the packer, who stands for quality should not be held to compete with those of questioned ability to produce good quality.

Advance Step in Economics.

"The packing of canned goods is an advanced step in economics and brings to the people the advantage of an excellent preservation of fresh goods in all seasons.

"By this method we are enabled to provide ourselves in seasons of plenty against those of insufficient supply that are almost sure to follow.

"The public has been prejudiced in the past by attacks from self-styled food experts, and a few years ago the industry was held up to such scathing criticism, as the result of wholesale condemnation, growing out of altogether insufficient investigation of the general practices of the industry, that besides a monetary loss of millions of dollars, the admission of a man that he was really engaged in the canning business carried with it the accusation of being an undesirable citizen.

"If this test by fire was necessary in order to finally bring about the National Pure Food law, then it was worth the price, and the honest packer may congratulate himself that through it all he has had one staunch and intelligent defender, Dr. H. W. Wiley, of Washington.

A Fixed Grade of Quality.

"It has been suggested that it might be possible to establish a fixed grade of quality, but after all, the production of quality is much like the contract question, and is one in which the personality of the packer enters largely. The wholesale grocer has established his relations and business with a certain packer whom he feels can produce and deliver products of a very satisfactory quality, and while he buys from that packer various quantities of so-called standard goods there are neither rulings nor specifications by which these standards are established.

"It might be well to establish joint committees on standards. To accomplish this let there be three committees, each consisting of three members, one taken from each of the associations of wholesale grocers, canners and brokers, with the headquarters of one committee in New York to pass on eastern standards, one in Baltimore to pass on Baltimore and Maryland standards, and one in Chicago to pass on western standards. Any matters arising in controversy or where arbitration as to quality is required, could be passed up to the particular committee qualified to pass upon the goods and in this way many differences involving serious loss might be amicably and justly settled.

Matters of Mutual Interest.

"There are a great many matters which might be worked out to a better solution in ways that would be of great benefit to both packers and wholesale grocers. A close working arrangement between the transportation committees of the two associations might be particularly advantageous at this time when the country is threatened with an advance in freight rates and classification changes that will involve additional burdens to all lines of business. We, as canners, assure you of our deep concern for all matters that affect your organization as a whole and of our particular concern, and esteem for the co-operative work you extend to us in the distribution of our own brand of goods."

WEDDING BELLS IN THE TRADE.

W. A. Ford, of the office staff of the James Lumbers Co., Toronto, was married on Tuesday, June 16, to Miss Louella May Isaac, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Isaac, of Pearson Avenue, Toronto.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Hincks, pastor of the Dunn Avenue Methodist Church, in a bower of greenery and smilax.

A small reception was held after the ceremony by Mrs. Isaac, and later in the afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Ford left to spend their honeymoon in the Thousand Islands. They will live afterwards on Callender Street, Toronto.

Frank Crysdale, only son of Ald. Crysdale, of C. H. Crysdale & Son, retail grocers, Oshawa, was married on the 10th inst. at Fingal, Ont., to Miss Waters, of St. Thomas. The newly-made benedict was a few years ago taken into partnership with his father, and it is only proper that he should take unto himself a life partner.

The Canadian Grocer extends its best wishes to these newly-married couples.

PROVINCIAL ASSOCIATION FOR B.C.

Retail Grocers of the Coast Form Central Organization—Aims to Protect Trade Interests and Prove of General Benefit. . . . .

An important step was taken by representatives of the retail grocers of the coast on Monday, June 8th, when a Provincial Retail Grocers' Association was organized with the idea of promoting trade interests and of benefitting the members generally. The meeting was held in Vancouver, and representatives were present from Victoria, Nanaimo and New Westminster, as well as Vancouver. S. J. Heald, T. Redding, E. B. Jones, E. J. Hall, H. O. Kiergkam, Fred Carne and Thomas S. Futcher, came over from Victoria; W. H. Morton and James Young, from Nanaimo, and C. P. Dean, from New Westminster. From Vancouver there were W. J. Andrews, W. H. Walsh, T. J. Hunter, F. Wright, George Hobson, L. McTaggart, E. Pooke, F. W. Welch, W. Clark, Mr. White and W. J. Hunter, Secretary of the Vancouver Association.

Officers were elected as follows: President, Fred. Carne, Victoria; First Vice-President, F. W. Welch, Vancouver; Second Vice-President, George Adams, New Westminster; Third Vice-President, James Young, Nanaimo; Secretary-Treasurer, T. J. Hunter, Vancouver; Directors, T. Redding and E. J. Wall, Victoria; W. H. Walsh, and E. Pooke, Vancouver, and C. P. Dean, New Westminster. In speaking of the organization, Mr. Hunter stated that the association was formed to foster and maintain a permanent social feeling among the retail grocers of the Province; to obliterate district differences and inspire confidence among the members of the trade; to correct excessive and unmercantile competition; to remove by concert of action such evils and customs as are against sound business principles and good policy, whether it be the cutting of prices, selling of the wholesale houses at retail, improper house to house peddling, the distribution and consumption of adulterated and unwholesome goods, the use of fictitious labels, the use of dishonest weights and measures, or whatsoever the evil may be; to disseminate useful information; to watch and influence legislation towards the better protection of capital; to assist members in collecting delinquent accounts; to encourage the observance of Sabbath and all legal holidays; and to attain the results which experience has proved are not attainable through individual or divided effort.

The new organization will be known as the British Columbia Retail Grocers' Association, and should do a valuable work in raising the standard of the retail trade in the Province.

CHANGES IN TRAVELING STAFF.

As a result of the death of the late W. C. Adams, of the traveling staff of Davidson-Hay, Toronto, several changes in the traveling staff have been made during the last week. Wm. Anderson, who has been doing good work in Eastern Ontario, takes part of Mr. Adams' old territory, including the Parry Sound district and the north shore up to Sudbury. L. Chapman will cover all the Soo branch and the main line west of Sudbury. E. J. Peters, who was formerly with the firm, returns again and will cover Mr. Anderson's territory in Eastern Ontario.

GUILD MEETING IN PROGRESS.

Large Attendance and Interesting Sessions in Historic City.

The annual meeting of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild, which is being held in Quebec on Wednesday and Thursday of this week, promises to be one of the most successful gatherings the wholesale trade in Canada has ever enjoyed. The attendance is large, the trade in all sections of Canada being represented, and as many of the representatives have their ladies with them, a social as well as a business aspect is given the gathering. Those in attendance, too, are enjoying the natural beauties and historical atmosphere of Canada's old fortress city.

A comprehensive account of the proceedings of the meeting will appear in these pages next week.

WILL REMEDY TRADE ABUSES.

Bill to Amend Inspection and Sale Act Passes House.

The frauds which have been perpetrated in different parts of Canada in contravention of the Fruit Marks Act, particularly during the last season, bid fair to be dealt with more stringently under Hon. Sydney Fisher's bill to amend the Inspection and Sale Act, which came up in the House of Commons on Monday.

The amendment provides, among other things, for more severe penalties for infractions of the fruit marks act, and also in respect to the adulteration of cheese.

Several members suggested that the penalties for violation of the fruit marks act were too severe.

Mr. Fisher said that he was prepared to reduce the penalties so that for a first offense the penalty would not exceed $25 nor be less than $10; for a second offense, not more than $50 nor less than $25, and for a third offense, not exceeding $200 nor less than $50. With these alterations the bill was reported and passed.

"Men Who Sell Things"

How One Traveler Made a Success on a Rush Trip—Sheldon's Method of Esti mating an Employe's Value — The Wheelbarrow Sa lesman and His Two Handles—Enthusiasm an Important Factor.

By Walter D. Moody—Serial rights for Canada purchased by the MacLean Publi hing Co. from the publishers, A. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

Not content with leaning on the broken reed of their own procrastinating methods while others all around them are getting away from them a large share of business easily within their grasp, they try to argue away the chief point adhered to by their more progressive brethren in the face for sales—namely, that "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush."

Again I must ask the reader's forgiveness in relating a personal experience which seems to fit in right here, and am willing to bear criticism on that point, if my little book prove a help to some in bringing their attention to the necessity of increased energy in the daily routine of their efforts at winning success. My sole purpose in relating this incident is to point out the reason why, in a certain class of salesmen, the negative qualities are outweighed by the positive. In any event, the reader will agree with me that our sins of omission, as well as those of commission, are traceable to our weaknesses, and also that a cure can be effected only through the development of strong qualities.

Our firm had experienced considerable difficulty in drawing business from the West and Northwest through Chicago to the smaller Eastern market in which our house was located. At different times we had employed two or three salesmen in that section without success. On looking the situation over, we concluded that it was necessary for a member of the firm to go out there and do a little missionary work. Having traveled there at an earlier period, I volunteered to make the trip.

A Flying Trip's Incidents.

The time to make an advance trip with fall goods being at hand, I immediately mapped up a flyer for ten days, at the end of which I was to meet our buyers in New York. There was no time to lose and keep the Eastern engagement, so I laid out the trip to make close connections.

The first town on the list was Oshkosh, Wisconsin. I arrived there at 4.30 on a hot June afternoon, and planned to get through and leave, if possible, on the 9.30 train the same night.

The sample-rooms were all taken at the Atherton Hotel, and I had to open my trunks in the billiard room, which was used for that purpose when the place was crowded. I made no attempt at a regular display, but simply arranged the trays to be gotten at handily.

Rushing out of a side entrance to make my first call, I ran into Oley, the Swedish porter, who stopped me long enough to say that two rival salesmen from Chicago had been there all day long winding up their summer business. Noticing my arrival and seeing me unpacking fall goods Oley explained that they had said to him, "He'll have a fine time trying to sell winter goods with the thermometer 93 degrees in the shade. We have a small line of advance goods along with our summer stuff, but haven't tried to do any business. Why! You can't even interest the trade in stuff for present use, to say nothing of goods they'll not need for three months to come. He might as well close up and move on. We've been around sounding the trade, and that's the verdict."

"Give them my regards, Oley," I said. "Perhaps they are right, but I'm going to make a stab at it, anyway. Maybe things are not so bad as they predict."

It was a walk of but two blocks to my first customer's store. A few pleasant greetings over, I explained that I was a little pressed for time, and followed up the remark with an earnest appeal for an immediate engagement.

Possibly the urgency of the whole thing impressed them; at any rate, they were over in my room at 5.30. Being quick buyers, they selected a bill amounting to three hundred and fifty dollars by 6.30.

Snatching a mouthful of supper, I hurried back to the sample-room and selected a few samples of the best selling numbers. These I quickly packed into telescopes and boarded a car for the South Side, across the river. The merchant I wanted to see kept open nights, and I was fortunate in finding him in.

Apologizing for troubling him at that late hour, I began unstrapping my cases, keeping up a running fire of selling talk in the meanwhile. He protested that he didn't want to buy so far in advance of the season. Perhaps if I had had as much time on my hands as my Chicago rivals I would have listened to him, but I kept right on, ignoring his protests as tactfully as possible, and finally caught his eye with an unusually attractive value in the velvet line.

He called a clerk, and together they took a few samples and retired to the rear of the store to compare them. They talked them over so long that I began to get nervous. It was eight o'clock. But an hour and half remained in which to return to the hotel, pack up, and catch the train. I was going to interrupt them, when they started toward me, talking earnestly and nodding their heads.

Something in the manner of the dealer told me that the deal was off. Sure enough. Handing back my samples, he said: "You've got some good values; in fact, I don't mind telling you they are a shade better than the samples sent me by the other houses. I will probably send you an order later on, but I don't want to place it now."

Closing the Sale.

It took me less time to tell him than to write it that I wasn't trying to sell him a cat in a bag; that his own judgment confirmed the quality of my goods, that I had confidence in him, and hoped he had confidence in me; that nothing could be gained by either of us by delay; if he wanted my goods it would be necessary to book his order right there, as I would not guarantee the prices for forty-eight hours.

That brought him around. When I said good-bye, the perspiration was running down my back but I had his order for four hundred and fifty dollars safely tucked away in my inside pocket. That made eight hundred dollars for a few hours' work. It was reassuring, to say the least, when I thought of my two Job's comforters back in the hotel wishing me all kinds of good luck.

I made the train by the small margin of a hair; it was pulling in at the depot when I arrived. There was no time to check baggage. Quickly I ordered the drayman to back right up to the baggage car and dump my trunks in without being checked. The station agent was one of the sort that every traveling salesman carries around a club for. He started right in to veto proceedings, but he was a minute late. The conductor shouted, "All aboard!" I threw a half-dollar to the driver, telling him to hurry and drive off. The train pulled out, and I swung onto the rear platform. I stood there and waved my adieu to the enraged agent, but it was lost in the shuffle, for he was blessing the drayman in three languages.

The conductor let me into the baggage car. Handing the baggageman a cigar, I remarked pleasantly: "I had to break the rules this time, brother. Will you please check these trunks to Green Bay?"

Don't Beat About the Bush.

That was rushing things too much for comfort, but I really believe that some salesmen lose business by having so much time on their hands that they don't know what to do with it. Either they do not make the effort, or they talk their customers all around Robin Hood's barn, until patience ceases to be a virture; the merchants give the orders to the man who attends to his business and then gets away as soon as he can.

Mind you, I haven't said, "Do as I have done, and you will succeed." Not at all; but rather, I have hinted that you should learn by mistakes how to avoid them.

Suppose that with a house of one hundred salesmen we have fifteen that are full of faith in their house and their work, and eighty-five that stand out careless and indifferent. What can such a house do? Only fifteen are able to fight, and there are eighty-five fussy, feeble men to look after! Don't you see why that house can make no inroads on the trade of its competitors? Don't you see why it is that you haven't headed the sales list in your establishme t since you first picked up your grip sack?

My plan is to take a common-sense view of the facts. I like to deal with facts. You can't get around a fact. Theories you can brush out of the way, but when you come to a fact you cannot dig under it, and you cannot jump over it; you have to meet it.

Estimating an Employe's Value.

A. F. Sheldon, founder of the Sheldon School of Scientific Salesmanship, asked the general manager of the largest institution of its kind in the world the question, "How do you measure the value of an employe?"

The answer was, "By the degree of supervision which he requires. The less supervision he needs, no matter what he is doing, the more valuable he becomes."

His next question was, "What is the cause of the need of supervision?"

Again the answer promptly came, "All supervision is caused by two classes of sins; first, sins of omission; second, sins of commission. If the employe in any capacity did not omit to do a thing which he should do, and in doing it committed no errors, then he would need no supervision, and his value would be at the highest."

The manner in which James Keeley, managing editor of The Chicago Tribune, with the assistance of Harry Olsen, effected the capture of Paul O. Stensland, the Chicago bank-wrecker, in Tangier, Morocco, in 1906, exemplifies the sort of enterprise that does things.

Enterprise That Does Things.

It is an admirable lesson in pluck and energy that might well be followed by the class of salesmen who mean well enough, but only partially succeed through puttering around. Intelligent application to instant opportunity is necessary in performing such work. While the detectives were theorizing, the Tribune was working. The information received was indefinite, but investigation proved its probable accuracy, and led Messrs. Keeley and Olsen in tracking Stensland to Tangier, and there arresting him.

Speaking of the incident, the leading daily of another city said:

> "The arrest of Paul O. Stensland is an indication of what the press can do, and also what the Chicago police cannot do. The Chicago Tribune has found the man for whom twenty-two thousand depositors of the Milwaukee Avenue State Bank were looking, and for whom the united police force of the world was supposed to be looking, while the sensational press was 'discovering, him in every nook and corner of the world in various disguises.
> "The Tribune was the first to receive something in the nature of a clue to the whereabouts of the missing banker. But the clue was slight, and would have been worthless had it not been followed up with discretion, with patience and a study of the subject of the pursuit and what a fleeing criminal would be likely to do under the circumstances in which Stensland had placed himself. A study of the conditions of the various countries in which he might seek refuge was also to be made. It required that knowledge of human nature that after a time becomes a second nature to the trained reporter.
> The Tribune in its pursuit of the criminal did not avail itself of the services of a detective. The trained detectives were looking in an altogether different direction for the fleeing banker. It is not too much to say that had it not been for the Chicago Tribune, in all probability the fraudulent banker would never have been discovered, and might have lived in ease on his ill-gotten gains—money of which he had robbed the poor who had confidence in him."

When Mr. Keeley finally cabled the Tribune that the actual arrest had taken place, the question of getting the prisoner safely back to the United States was attended with all manner of international complications. It was finally decided to send a stenographer from the office of the State's Attorney to Washington to confer with the State Department in an effort to secure the aid of the United States Government for a proper and immediate transfer. His mission was attended with the usual amount of red tape "necessary" to such procedure, causing dangerous delay.

At this interesting juncture the Washington correspondent of the Tribune, Mr. Raymond, comprehending the necessity for vigorous action, entirely without regard to the traditions of international relations, took matters in his own hands and called upon President Roosevelt at his summer home at Oyster Bay. A brief interview was all that was necessary to show him that the President appreciated the urgency of the case, and that he was in hearty sympathy with the victims of the wrecked bank.

With characteristic independence, Mr. Roosevelt did not hesitate to overturn the traditions of musty international law, declaring that he would go to any extent necessary to secure the return and subsequent punishment of the bank-wrecker who had stolen millions, and who was denounced as "one of the most obnoxious types of criminals." The interview finished, without a moment's hesitation the President sent a telegram to the Hon. Robert Bacon, Acting Secretary of State at Washington, instructing him concerning the case, stating that it was his desire to appoint James Keeley and Harry Olsen as official representatives to take Stensland in custody.

Stensland arrived in Chicago in due time in charge of his captors, and was duly prosecuted according to law.

The Fussy newspaper man, like the Fussy Salesman, makes a good stroke now and then, when fortune favors him, but in most cases he fools away his best opportunities of doing something worth while. The sort of enterprise exhibited by Keeley and Raymond in behalf of their paper is the kind that will enable the salesman to win big scoops of business for his house.

WAS OLD TORONTO WHOLESALER

Daniel McIntosh Died Suddenly in Church on Sunday.

While sitting in his pew in Chalmer's Presbyterian Church, Toronto, on Sunday morning, June 14, Daniel McIntosh, one of the elders of the church, suddenly fell over dead. He had walked to church from his home at 135 Beatrice St. and was only in his seat a few minutes when the end came.

Mr. McIntosh was some twenty-five years ago a member of Hill, McIntosh & Innes who conducted a wholesale grocery business for some time on Front St. He was born in Nairn, Scotland, seventy-seven years ago and came to Canada in 1852. A family of nine daughters and sons survive.

EXTRA STEAM BEHIND.

When a heavy train approaches a particularly stiff grade, an additional engine pushing on behind is a great help. The business of a traveling salesman is usually "up-grade" all the time. Anything that will help him keep his old customers and land new accounts is like an additional force pushing on behind. If your house is an advertiser in a trade newspaper it acts as an extra force helping you "up-grade."

MONTREAL.

June 15.—Business has been very good during the past week, especially with the larger dealers. The warm weather has stimulated trade pretty generally. Some of the smaller grocers have experienced a slight falling off from last week, but altogether there is not much cause for complaint.

The Co-operative Grocery Co., whom it was reported had bought the stock of Kingsley Harrison in our last issue, intend to open another store in the near future. A. Girard, Jr., the proprietor of the Co-operative Grocery Co., states that there will be a chain of these stores established throughout the city.

In a local store with an exceptionally bright interior may be seen fly netting put to good use. The entire expanse of shelves are covered with this material, and in this way the stock is kept much cleaner than it would otherwise be.

A query regarding the accessibility of goods elicited the response that the clerks did not find it awkward to get at the stock on the shelves.

G. H. Munroe, of Munroe Bros., is now confining his attention to his principal store at the corner of Mountain and St. Antoine Sts., having disposed of his uptown branch.

Walter Paul, who is attending the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Winnipeg, intends to return via Chicago, and will visit other American cities on his way home.

Sometimes grocers, and in fact all people, are said to be irritable, and are accused of all sorts of disagreeable propensities if they try to keep those in their employ in the right path by giving them good advice, and pointing out their deficiencies. There is a certain grocer in this city who is exceptionally well informed regarding the source of all the commodities which he offers for sale in his store. This man discoursed very volubly on the difficulty which he had in making his clerks take an interest in the business sufficiently to learn the origin of the products which they were handling. Now, perhaps this grocer in question might have been an extremist, but the fact remains that an infinitely greater pleasure can be taken out of the everyday things of life if we know something about their origin. For instance, two baskets of onions may sit side by side at a grocer's door. One basket was raised, perhaps, in our own country, and yet it is being run closely by a product which has found its way from the broad fields of ancient Egypt.

This is only a sample of the many interesting things which may be learned about the products which daily come under the notice of the clerk.

The latest addition to the grocer's comfort, and it is claimed a money maker for him also is a "Remembrancer." This machine is expected to supply what the human memory cannot. Very frequently you may witness a grocer reciting to a customer the various things which he thinks he or she might have forgotten, but even the grocer, familiar as he may be with his stock, will omit the very article which the customer most desires, and which he or she has forgotten. Now, all that the customer has to do is to stand before a machine, which does not look unlike a cash register, and then in rapid succession, on a strip of paper, there passes before the vision all of the products kept in stock by the grocer. Between the subdivisions of the stock into their various groups, advertising notes are seen, printed in red. This machine, it is claimed, pays for itself in a very short time by the extra sales it brings.

R. J. Kyle, of Kyle & Stevenson, grocers, corner Waverly St. and Esplanade Ave., who was drowned in the Laurentian Baths Wednesday night, was buried on Friday afternoon.

There is a back store in a certain grocery in the city which is a model of order. Among the admirable methods employed by this grocer is one worthy of special mention. Frequently when canned goods come in they are stored away, one box on top of the other, and then when one box is wanted the whole stock has to be shifted to get at the right one. This difficulty is very nicely gotten over in the manner adopted by the grocer in question, who has piled the boxes in such a way that a particular box can be located in a minute and the top removed without disturbing any of the other boxes. This is accomplished by piling the boxes on their sides with the tops exposed at the front in a vertical position. In this way any box can be selected and the cover removed easily, as it is the free side of the box which makes the face of the pile. The sides of the box, so to speak, are opposed to the sides of the other boxes in the same way as a brick in a wall would appear if the largest side were exposed. It was explained that this led to the shelves in the store proper being kept in good condition and full, because the stock in the back store was more easily accessible.

E. W. Kingston, Australian agent for Cailler's Swiss Milk Chocolate, was in town last week, calling on W. H. Dunn, the Canadian agent for Cailler's.

SOME PERTINENT QUESTIONS.

Our Guelph correspondent sends in this week the list of questions which appears below and suggests that they be discussed by correspondents and readers of The Grocer. The idea is a good one and we will be glad to hear from grocers and clerks generally in regard to the matters suggested. A thorough discussion of any of these matters will undoubtedly lead to steps being taken which will be of benefit to the trade :

1. How many hours a week should a grocer or his clerk work ?
2. Should a clerk have any holidays ? If so, why ?
3. Should clerks be paid by the hours they serve or by the amount of their sales, or how ?
4. Should every clerk know the cost mark ? If not, why not ?
5. Should all goods be marked in plain figures ?
6. What should consist or be estimated as a good day's sales for a clerk ?

ST. JOHN.

June 15.—Ontario flour declined 20 cents a barrel last week. Cheese is also a little lower and the dealers are now being supplied by the local factories. Business continues quiet, which is probably due to a large extent to the farmers being busy seeding. The outlook for a good crop this year is excellent.

The delegates from the N.B. Grocers' Guild to the meeting of the Dominion Grocers' Guild at Quebec, will leave tomorrow. W. C. Cross, of Hall & Fairweather, will go in place of Geo. E. Barbour. Mr. Cross is on the programme for an address.

Keith & Plummer, general storekeepers, and Franklin Clark, of Hartland, are clearing away the ground preparatory to the erection of large brick buildings, that of the former to be 60x80 feet, that of Mr. Clark to be 30x60 feet. The buildings will form a solid brick block two storeys high, with a concrete basement.

A rather cool game was worked in D. J. Purdy's grocery, Main Street, on Wednesday last when as the result of a telephone message a stranger was enabled to procure some $10 or $12 worth of goods. The message was to the effect that a young man would call at the store for some supplies for a schooner then in port. The man called, got the goods and took them with him, telling the clerk to charge them to the owners of the vessel. A few hours later the man was arrested while trying to dispose of his booty.

Arthur Carlyle, who acted as collector of the Merchants' Protective Association, with an office in Horsfield Street, is reported missing, and a number of merchants who had entrusted accounts to him are anxious for his return. It is said he has gone to New York. No formal charge has been laid against him.

A joint delegation from the common council and board of trade left last week for Ottawa to confer with Hon. Wm.

Pugsley and other members of the Government as to the future development of harbor facilities here.

F. R. Doerhen, a resident of Barbadoes, was in the city last week trying to interest merchants in promoting trade between this port and the West Indies. He said the West Indies are trading altogether too much with the United States. They should be able to buy more advantageously in Canada. Mr. Doerhen left on Thursday for Halifax.

HALIFAX.

June 13.—The market is well stocked with fruit and green truck and trade is quite brisk in all lines. The quantity of fruit imported and consumed here is greater than ever before, and is increasing all the time. Bananas are quoted at $2.50 to $3, pines at $2 per dozen, peaches at $3.50 per crate and cherries at $2.50 per box. American tomatoes are selling at $1.75 per crate of four baskets, cukes at 7 cents each, watermelons at 75 cents each, cabbage per crate at $1.75 and strawberries at 20 cents per box. Jobbers say that business is good all round and that collections are improving.

There has been a heavy decrease in the price of Bermuda onions this week. Boxes containing 45 pounds were sold for $1 each, a drop of nearly $1. The season for them is about over and as the stocks on hand were quite heavy a cut in the price was necessary.

Large stocks of potatoes are still held here, and are quoted at $1.50 per three-bushel bag. Potatoes kept remarkably well during the past winter, and the stocks now on hand are in first-class condition. Parsnips are about done and carrots are becoming scarce.

The price of butter is holding quite firm, notwithstanding the heavy receipts. Small tubs and rolls of dairy butter are coming in in good supply, and the demand for choice stock is about the average for the season. The jobbers complain that the farmers are expecting too much for their butter. They say that the prices asked here are far in advance of those quoted elsewhere. Eggs are in good supply with a fair demand, the price holding firm at eighteen cents.

Cash System Coming in Vancouver and Saskatoon—Edmonton Trying to Secure Better Freight Rates.

VANCOUVER.

June 13.—Mexican tomatoes are on the market here for the first time, being an outcome of the trade now being established between British Columbia and Mexico. The vegetable is of fine quality, of good shape and size, with a remarkably smooth skin. They seem rather better than the local varieties in both shape and all-round quality, and also in price, being a cent or two cheaper. They job at about 19c when figured down to actual weight per crate, as against about 21c for the hothouse locals.

Richard Hall, of Point Comfort, Mayne Island, midway between Vancouver and Victoria, in the Gulf of Georgia, is the pioneer of the tomato-raising industry in that part of the province. He has two large glass houses erected, each 130 feet long, and expects in a couple of weeks to take off his first crop. Other farmers on the island have followed Mr. Hall's example, but are planting in the open air. The market is a good one close at hand, and the venture should be profitable. The seed was obtained by Mr. Hall from Jersey, England.

Warm weather has started in with a rush this week, and strawberries and other small fruit which require the heat for ripening, are coming along rapidly. Although the season is late, the berries will come along in the natural order of sequence, though with continued heat, the season may be somewhat shortened.

The only adverse report obtained from farmers in the lower part of the Fraser river delta is regarding the potato crop. This will suffer as a result of the large amount of rain which fell in some sections last month. The seed rotted, and there are instances of where a second planting was put in. The acreage devoted to potatoes in the delta this year is the largest yet, but this extra extent will be about offset by the delay to growth. Cherries will be a large crop, in fact everything has set well, with the exception, perhaps, of prunes, which does not promise to be heavy.

E. W. Leeson, wholesaler, of this city, has returned from Prince Rupert, where he went to look for a business opening. If facilities can be acquired there that will permit the handling of fruit and produce, he will open a branch, but it is doubtful if he can secure what he needs. There is only one wharf there, and under present conditions it is not likely that any part of it will be leased by the G.T.P., for the company will need it for its own business.

The cash system of doing business, or at least, the curtailment of credit is fast obtaining in the various lines of trade on the coast. Following the action of the merchants, P. Burns & Co. has announced to their customers that all accounts must be paid by the 20th of the month. This firm has a large number of meat shops in towns of British Columbia, and this rule will go into effect in all of them.

The growing of flax, which is to be undertaken by the Lillooet Flax Company will mark a step forward in British Columbia's industries. This company, the manager of which is A. Bauthier, has secured a large tract of bottom land back of Port Haney, thirty miles from Vancouver, and will reclaim it the operations having already commenced. After the flax is ready, it is proposed to manufacture linen, and the various by-products, such as linseed oil, etc. Mr. Bauthier, who is an experienced hand thinks that nowhere are conditions for flax-growing better than here.

Charles Woodward, head of the Woodward departmental stores, left this week on a trip to Europe to make purchases, He will be accompanied to Montreal by his daughters, Mrs. Fisher and Miss Woodward, where the latter will await his return from England.

The Okanagan Flour Mills Co., at Armstrong, which has been in liquidation, last week ratified an agreement whereby the property and assets of the company are sold to Donald Matheson, Donald Graham, Mark Hill, Thos. Clinton and George Parkinson, for the sum of $35,000. The purchasers assume all obligations, and agree to discharge the outstanding liabilities of the company, both before and after liquidation.

On Tuesday evening a destructive fire took place at the factory of the Empress Manufacturing Company. This company manufactures jam, etc., and has a large trade in the west. The fire started in the engine room, between 6.30 and 7 in the evening, and the extract plant was totally destroyed. The coffee and jam plants escaped. The loss is estimated at $50,000 or $60,000 damage, with $30,000 insurance. The company is to be commended on its enterprise, for the next morning work was commenced and it is expected that only a week or ten days will elapse before business is resumed to meet current demand.

The Commercial Travelers' Convention, which was held in Vancouver last week, will mean much to the Canadian West, both from a commercial and social point of view. Fortunately the weather was ideal and every arrangement was carried out. The visiting drummers were able to see what a commercial centre this city is, and were able to appreciate the hearty reception tendered them by the Canadian people. To the local committee all praise is due, for they spared no effort or expense to make the convention a success, and the visit of the outsiders a pleasant one. That they were thoroughly successful is shown by the enthusiastic way in which the whole affair passed off and the generous entertainment accorded will not be lost.

SASKATOON.

June 12.—The state of the grocery business is very satisfactory at present. There is room for improvement, however, in cutting down goods given on time as payments are slow, but the tendency is towards a cash trade all the time. Two or three of the leading grocers in town who run departmental stores, have schemes on foot by which they give each customer a coupon for each dollar's worth of goods purchased. At a certain time drawings will be held and prizes awarded to the lucky coupon holders. This induces many to pay cash who would otherwise not.

Saskatoon is to have a wholesale distributing warehouse all to itself in a few months' time. Last year the A. Macdonald Co., of Winnipeg, opened a branch warehouse here, and the business handled by it has so increased that the company has decided to erect a large brick and stone building which will meet the needs of the trade for some time to come. A.

Macdonald, president of the company, was in town a few days ago, and purchased a site for the building on First Avenue.

Farmers are now well pleased at the prospects for a bumper crop this year. The rain of the last few days has produced a rapid growth throughout this district. Last year's wheat is being disposed of as rapidly as circumstances will allow, as the market is dropping all the time. The Saskatoon Milling Co. report an average delivery each day.

Freeman & Co. have sold out their grocery business on Twentieth Street, and have gone to Keppel, Sask., where they intend carrying on a similar trade. H. S. Hughes has also disposed of his business.

EDMONTON.

June 15.—W. B. Lanigan, general freight agent for the C.P.R. Western lines, while in the city last week, met a number of the members of the wholesale section of the Board of Trade to discuss with them the question of a reduction in the freight rates prevailing on freight below 100 pounds going out of Edmonton on the C.P.R. Up to the present time this rate has been higher than a freight slightly over 100 pounds. This worked a hardship both on the Edmonton manufacturer or wholesaler and also on the small retailer in the Edmonton district. The Edmonton shippers wished to get the same rate on small freight as on large consignments out of Edmonton. Mr. Lanigan promised to consider the matter and see if something could not be done to improve the freight rates on small shipments.

A factory for the manufacture of candies, aerated waters, vinegar, pickles and sauces may be established in the city this summer by a company of local men if the city council decide to give them reasonable concessions. At the last meeting of the city council J. K. McDonald, on behalf of this company, made application for a site for the factory, and other concessions. He stated that an arrangement whereby the company might lease a site for three years at six per cent., with the option of purchase at the end of that time, would prove satisfactory.

It is expected that the exterior of the new Griffith packing plant will be completed this week, when work on the interior will be pushed with all possible speed. It is understood that several carloads of machinery are now on the way and will reach Edmonton in a few weeks' time. A great many changes have been made in the plans as originally designed, the object of this being to secure a plant of the most modern type possible. It is expected that packing will be begun some time through the fall, probably as early as October.

CHATHAM.

June 15.—The rains of Saturday and Sunday meant hundreds, probably thousands, of dollars to strawberry growers in the western peninsula. The outlook for the crop at the opening of the season was excellent, but the continued drought had its inevitable effect upon the vines. Early last week the first home grown berries sold for 20c. a box. On Thursday they were down to 10c. Saturday saw the price, in response to the expected falling off of the crop, rise to 15c. Saturday night brought heavy rain, however, and prices are now down to 10c. again, with a still further fall in prospect. High prices are good for the growers—but not much good when there are no strawberries.

An addition to the Kent Canning works, 1½ storeys high and 40 x 76 feet is to be built shortly.

This week a party of Chathamites leave for the Old Country, among their number being Mr. and Mrs. John McCorvie. They will probably be abroad a month or more.

J. A. Muckle, who has been a member of the staff of the Bradley store here since its inception over a year ago, left to-day for Windsor to accept a position in W. J. Cherney's grocery.

Chatham's second 5, 10, 15-cent store was opened on Saturday. S. H. Knox & Company have followed closely on the heels of Brewster & Co., and keen rivalry is anticipated between the two concerns. The grocery trade is little affected, however.

There was no quorum at the Retail Merchants' meeting last Tuesday evening, the members having apparently failed to recover from the shock of the elections. A special meeting will probably be called in the near future to discuss house numbering, and the city telephone franchise. Merchants strongly realize the assistance which systematic house numbering would mean in the matter of deliveries. The Bell Telephone franchise expires this year, and there is talk of competition from independent lines. The consensus of opinion among retailers is that there is much room for improvement in the local system.

The establishment in this city during the past year of several bottled milk dairies has created a more or less lucrative side line for grocers, particularly those on the side streets. These grocers handle the bottled milk, some of them quite extensively. Many householders do not take ice during the summer months and these prefer to take their milk when they want it from the corner grocer, who keeps it fresh and cool in his refrigerator. Quite a number of customers have left the dairies and are now taking through the grocers. Up till about a year ago milk was usually sold from big cans, but the bottle innovation has proven very popular.

On June 5, the marriage took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Collins, Raleigh Street, of their eldest daughter, Miss Nettie Collins, to Chas. Gonyou of the Pere Marquette. Miss Collins was formerly a valued member of John McCorvie & Son's grocery staff, and among the many presents were a couple of beautiful oil paintings from that firm.

Mr. Lidden, of Inwood, has purchased Harry Chambers' meat shop, Bothwell.

Peter Mitgis, the peanut vendor, who makes his business home on King St., is the possessor of a new rubber-tired outfit, containing 3 compartments and an engine for roasting.

Ridgetown parties have purchased the hall at Cedar Springs, and intend opening a general store in the near future.

OTTAWA.

One of the busy retail centres in Ontario is Ottawa. Here the grocers have their business on a firm basis and they find time to get a surprising amount of work into their day and yet manage to enjoy themselves after hours. Travelers like to strike Ottawa about as well as any town in Canada, for the grocers there always have a glad hand and a cheery word for the man with the grip. This is not saying that grocers in other towns are not just as cordial—but there are so many good fellows in the Capital that the feeling of good fellowship seems more pronounced.

Just to keep themselves bright, the members of the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association have undertaken to run a pure food fair in connection with the Central Canada Exhibition, which takes place in September.

That it will be a splendid success is a foregone conclusion. Every man is working for it and their efforts are bound to be crowned with satisfactory results. A splendid, large, newly-completed building at the fair grounds in Lansdowne Park has been placed at their disposal and already more than half the space available has been sold.

The retailers have a good argument to use in talking to possible exhibitors in that the fair always draws thousands of people from all around Ottawa, which swells the attendance at the exhibition wonderfully. Last year fully one hundred thousand people visited Lansdowne Park.

It is more than likely, when all arrangements are made, that the display of food products this fall will be better than anything of the kind ever seen in Ottawa. President W. York, Duncan Bell and H. V. Ellis have been appointed delegates of the association to the convention of the Ontario Retail Merchants' Association, taking place in Galt this week.

J. C. Tully, paper and twines, has removed from Market Square to 14 Nicholas St., where he is in more commodious quarters.

Maclure & Langley, Toronto, who have become over-crowded in their premises at 154 Pearl Street, are removing this week to the offices and warehouse formerly occupied by the Blue Ribbon Tea Co., at 12 Front Street East. The change will place them a good deal nearer the centre of the wholesale section, and will also afford needed additional warehouse space.

BUSINESS LESSONS FROM A POLITICAL DEFEAT.

The recent election in Ontario is not without its object lesson to business men. The Whitney Administration was on the whole a satisfactory one. It certainly did better than its political opponents had declared it would. But it was not without its faults. No political administration ever was without them.

But the Opposition Party in the Legislature did not take advantage of the opportunities which the faults of the Government created. It did not wake up to the opportunities which even the "last awful week" afforded until after the House had adjourned and some of the newspapers began to stick editorial pins into them.

Possibly they were meditating on the tradition of the Liberal Party and hoped that would carry them through. But great as is the tradition of the Liberal Party, and valuable as has been its service to the country, it is as little likely to carry a party into power as political oratory is to inflate a balloon.

Business is not politics. But business men, as well as politicians, must grasp their opportunities if they are to win. Opportunities, as the ancient Greeks typified in their statues, must be grasped as they appear, not as they disappear. Neither will tradition alone serve. To have a good and a long record in business is not to be scoffed at. But it is the methods of to-day, not the acts of yesterday, that are the determining factors of present success.

The Liberal Party in the Ontario Legislature made the fatal mistake of getting busy at the eleventh hour and when opportunity had turned the corner, whereas it should have got busy immediately after the avalanche of January. 1905. Their opponents, on the other hand, never slept.

Business men should be busy all the time, not in doing things fitfully and without method, but with order, method and continuity.

Eleventh hour conversions may be effectual. But there is not much saving grace in eleventh hour developments of energy in either politics or business.

Trade is at present passing through a period of quietness. It does not follow, however, that business should be allowed to drift. On the contrary, there is every reason why it should be pushed.

If advertising, acumen, industry and up-to-date business methods possess utility for manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers they should certainly possess it when trade lags and needs the impetus which these things are supposed to impart.

Do not wait for a more convenient season or, Micawber-like, until something turns up, but "do it now and do it all the time."

The business men who keep their advertisements, their window displays, and their ideas working continuously will be found far in advance of their competitors when trade wakes up. And it is certainly showing signs of awakening.

THE NEW CANNED GOODS PRICES.

With the somewhat peculiar conditions existing in the canning industry in Canada at present the new prices for 1908 pack goods, which have been expected from the Canadian Canners for several weeks, were awaited with a good deal of interest and in certain quarters even some anxiety has been manifest.

It was practically certain that with the prospects for excellent crops in all lines of fruits and vegetables considerable reduction would be made and this was verified when the new prices came to the trade by means of an advance sheet early in the week. Peas at 75c, with the old price 92½c, corn at 85c, old price 97½c, and tomatoes at 95c, old price 127½c, furnish an idea of the amount of the drop, and this is practically general throughout vegetables, and, with a few exceptions, in fruits.

Considering the prospects for bumper crops, large pack and consequent large business the prices on most lines seem to be fair and about what was expected. Tomatoes, without doubt, furnish the greatest surprise. Taking into account the 10 per cent. trade discount and the freight charges which must be paid by the packer, the price is low, and members of the trade express the idea that very little, if any, money will be made on these goods at this price.

When it is considered that a large part of the pack of the independent canners is tomatoes, this price is regarded in some quarters as a direct slap at the independents. What course they will take as a result is a matter of interesting inquiry.

While the curiosity of the trade is satisfied to some extent by the announcement of the new prices, there yet remains an element of interest as to how the situation will work out. It is said that large stocks of last year's pack are still held in different parts of Canada. The canners will have to provide for covering the difference in prices, and this will be no inconsiderable item.

The situation at present presents opportunities for manipulation which might put the industry in a peculiar position so far as the canners are concerned. It is scarcely likely that these will be taken advantage of, but there is the possibility just the same.

In the meantime the retail trade, and, in most cases, also, the jobbers, looks on and bides its time. So far as can be learned, little buying has as yet been done on the new basis.

AN OBLIGING (?) CUSTOMER.

A retailer in a Western Ontario town was recently pressed for money. He in turn began to press his customers, some of whom were considerably in arrears. One of his customers whom he approached was a wealthy farmer who owed him $80.

"I wish," he said, "that you would pay me the account you owe me. It is owing nearly a year and I am very much in need of money."

"I can't pay it now," replied the farmer.

"Why, you have money in the bank," persisted the retailer.

"Yes, I know I have, but it is earning interest and I can't afford to lose the interest just now. Why don't you borrow? Why, I will lend you money if you want it, at 6 per cent."

The conclusion of the matter was that the farmer lent the retailer $80 at 6 per cent., but would not pay his account. This is surely a new type of high finance.

THE SITUATION IN THE WEST

The Western Viewpoint, by our Special Winnipeg Correspondent.

Your correspondent has been playing hooky for the past two weeks but perhaps your readers have not lost anything thereby for the trip was over nearly 500 miles of territory in the northwestern part of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and, as seeing is believing, it is possible to speak with authority concerning at least a goodly portion of the crop areas of the West. Anything more beautiful or promising than the country at the present time would be difficult to imagine. One man who has spent 35 years on a western farm remarked that it would be difficult to imagine any day of the present crop season that could have been improved upon. It is not only that the growth has been rapid, but the plants are well stooled and particularly vigorous and healthy.

Estimates of acreage continue to come in from different sources. One of the most carefully prepared is that of Secretary Fowler, of the Northwest Grain Dealers Association. This estimate places the wheat area at 5,767,000, a gain of 15 per cent.; oats at 2,607,000, a gain of 10 per cent.; barley at 855,-650, a gain of 9 per cent; and flax at 123,420, a gain of 2 per cent. There is really only one exception to be taken to these figures and that is, that the area of wheat is too small. The gain is fully 20 per cent. which would run the acreage over the 6,000,000 mark. It is, of course, far too early to begin to estimate yields, but it may not be out of place to remark that the average of the last ten years in the Canadian West had been nearly 19 bushels to the acre and should 1908 mark up to the average it would mean a crop of 114,000,000 bushels. The West may not reap half that amount but one thing is certain, the present will be a hard crop to kill, owing to the extremely favorable conditions under which it has been planted and the fine growing weather that has obtained since seed time.

The wheat market has been materially affected by the promise of bountiful crops, not only in the Canadian West, but also in the winter wheat belts and there has been a serious decline in the past two weeks, with small recoveries from time to time. The lower prices have increased the export trade materially and one or two firms have cleaned up pretty well the last of the low grade wheats and report an improved demand for higher grades, but following the plan of the whole season the moment wheat reacts to high levels there is a falling off in the British demand. There has been the expected increase in receipts now that seeding is over but it is not expected to last and at the outside the crop of 1907 will not run over 67,000,000 bushels, which is, however, some 5,000,-000 better than was at one time expected, and the bulk of this was marketed at profitable prices.

All thought and attention now is turned toward new wheat, but the oat crop of 1907 is still to be heard from and it is expected that there will be some sensational fireworks at the end of June. One house has been trying to work a corner, a large percentage of their holdings have been bought at very high figures and still the oats continue to come and it seemed hardly possible with the present poor consumptive demand that anything but a fiasco can attend the closing of the corner.

There is a marked improvement in the business situation in the city, although money is still tight. The letting of the contract for the new Union Depot and the street improvements that are being rushed by the city before exhibition time are absorbing a number of the unemployed and the whole situation is better than it has been for some weeks.

The fact that the crop has such a good start is encouraging country merchants to make preparations for increased business and this again is reflected in the wholesale houses. Wholesale hardware houses, who felt the tight times more than either grocery or dry goods, report that May business was up to that of the same month last year, which was an exceptionally heavy one. Stocks in the country, for the reasons above, have been allowed to run low and though there is little doing in carlot orders even now there is a steady and increasing trade in less than car lots. Trade, too, is much more on a cash basis in the hardware lines than it was before the stringency occurred and this is certainly a most satisfactory state of things. The fact is, the farmers of the Canadian West have met their obligations in such a way on the short crop of last year that business men have come to realize that there is very considerable accumulated wealth in the older settled districts and it will take something much more disastrous than one partial failure of crop to really cripple the West. The stringency, however, has had the effect of making farmers realize their position and the need of paying up store bills about which they were inclined to be careless when money was plenty and credit good.

June is supposed to be the special property of brides and even wedding presents point which way the wind blows. Chatting with the large stores in Winnipeg the other day it was learned that trade in articles that are looked upon almost exclusively as wedding presents such as silver, cut glass, hammered brass and costly china pieces has been fully 30 per cent. better than it was for June, 1907. Managers report that there has been perhaps a falling off in the number of larger and very expensive presents but an increase in the number of small and choice articles, for example, the cut glass running from $5 to $20, and that this trade has been almost exclusively cash.

So far as Winnipeg is concerned, June has been a month of meetings of all kinds, in fact, there has been a perfect epidemic, the Presbyterian General Assembly with its 400 commissioners, the Methodist Conference for the Province, the Anglican Synod, the Women's Missionary Conventions, and the Grand Lodge of the Masonic order are just a few of the things that have brought visitors to the city in hundreds this month. And truly, the visitors would go far to find a city looking more beautiful than Winnipeg does this year. Boulevards and trees are alike, a riot of green and early as it is the caragena hedges are a mass of yellow bloom and the tree honeysuckle and lilacs are all out in full bloom.

In connection with things to eat in the West a matter of interest is the formation of an association of the B.C. fruit growers that takes in 85 per cent. of all the growers. A determined effort is being made to capture the Winnipeg market for all the fruit they can possibly send and John Coltart has just returned from that province, having been appointed the Winnipeg representative. To him all the fruit of this association will be shipped so that it will be possible for the future to keep better tab on it and note as to the improvements in packing. Hood River strawberries have always been first favorites here and the B.C. people have succeeded in growing the variety in certain parts of that province and have secured one of the packers from Hood River to superintend the packing in B.C. this season. It is expected that 20 cars of B.C. strawberries will reach the Winnipeg market in the course of the next few weeks. The few that have already arrived are of excellent quality and have come forward in good condition. The B.C. fruit is noted for its depth of color as well as for the richness of flavor.

A feature of the present year will be the erection of buildings on farms. There has been a very marked drop in the price of lumber and already farmers who have refrained from building for some years owing to the extreme cost are laying their plans to erect new barns and stables between haying and harvest. The city of Winnipeg is reconsidering its adjustable contract that permitted of the purchase from one firm of not less than 2,000,000 feet and up to 5,000,-000 feet on prices based on the old market. About 2,000,000 has been used on this contract and the city fathers are figuring whether it would not be money in pocket to pay something to forfeit the contract and make a new deal at the new prices.

The whole western situation is one to inspire confidence.—H.

Markets and Market Notes

QUEBEC MARKETS

Montreal, June 17, 1908.

POINTERS—
Sugar—Steady.
Teas—New Japan on spot.
Beans—Very stiff.

SUGAR—Sugar remains steady, the demand during the week being a trifle better than the previous week. The depression is affecting the market, owing to the smaller orders coming from the factories using sugar. The household use of this commodity has not fallen off very appreciably. It is thought that the primary markets will remain fairly constant for some time.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES—There has been a fair local demand for immediate wants, making the last week brighter for this trade than the previous week. Cables regarding the Barbadoes and Porto Rican product contain no startling intelligence and seem to indicate steadiness in the primary markets.

TEAS—Fine Japans are now on the spot. These show good values as they were purchased and shipped before the market advanced. On May 16 heavy frost damaged high grade teas and now lines above 22c and 23c are hard to get. Latest cable reports indicate a rising Japan market. Present quotations are above last year's and there is every indication that it will remain so for some time. Ceylon and gunpowders have been in good demand during past week. Cable reports from Greece indicate a good crop this year, therefore buyers are holding off for lower prices. Prunes have shown no activity during the week due, perhaps, to high prices.

CANNED GOODS

Prices on 1908 pack goods for Ontario and Quebec issued this week by the Canadian Canners, show, as was generally expected, considerable reduction in almost every line. The prices quoted herewith are taken from an advance sheet, as up to the time of going to press the official printed prices have not been issued. The correctness of the prices given is not vouched for, but so far as can be ascertained up to the time of going to press they may be relied on. The list of prices on 1907 pack goods is also given for purposes of comparison.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Canned Goods—Prices for 1908 pack out.

Sugar—Steady.

Beans—Very firm.

Collections—Fair.

Toronto, June 18, 1908.

Interest in grocery circles this week centres on the Canadian Canners' new prices for 1908 canned goods, a provisional list of which was furnished to a number of the jobbers on Monday. With tomatoes at 95c, corn at 85c and peas at 75c, the prices seem to be about what the trade was expecting after the talk there has been for several weeks concerning the matter. Some surprise is evidenced at the price of tomatoes, but various causes are quoted as contributing to this figure. Jobbers seem to be pretty well satisfied. Local retailers, who might be expected to get busy under the announcement, are generally holding off, and seem to be willing to pursue a waiting policy in the belief that something further may occur before the summer is over.

Business generally continues fair, though none of the wholesale houses have been rushed. The situation, however, seems to be gradually clearing up and the expectation expressed is that the good crops promised everywhere in the country this summer will bring along good business.

SUGAR—The local market is quiet and retailers seem to be pursuing the same hand to mouth policy in buying that is evident in most other commodities.

The general situation has not changed materially during the week, beyond a slight strengthening. The trend of all markets is slowly upwards, and all indications point to a continuance of this.

Heavy rains are reported in Cuba and the crop is practically ended, the remainder to come in sight cannot vary much from 25,000 tons, any additions held on estates should go to local consumption to end of year.

The stock of 177,411 tons in Cuba for the U. S. to draw from for six months to come looks very small and points to large possibilities of sales from Europe and Java.

TEA—Business locally continues very quiet, and all buying is of the hand to mouth variety. Little interest is manifest among the jobbers. This statement is born out by a paragraph from Geo. Wilson-Stanton's latest London circular, which says:

"The quantity of Indian and Ceylon tea taken by the United States and Canada from the 1st January to 31st March, shows a considerable reduction, when compared with the corresponding period of last year. This falling off is shared in almost equal proportion by the two countries of production."

The situation in general continues pretty regular, though by last London reports a better tone is noticed in all the finer and more useful liquoring teas. An irregularity here and there is noted in common teas, but, generally, they hold up to regular quotations.

DRIED FRUITS — Currants and prunes are in fairly good demand, otherwise business is only ordinary. There is nothing new to report.

PLANNING FOR ANNUAL PICNIC.

Toronto Retail Grocers Complete Arrangements at Their Monthly Meeting.

June 17.—The question of the annual picnic, slated this year for Wednesday, July 15, is taking up most of the attention of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association just now, and it was principally this outing that was talked about at their regular monthly meeting in their rooms in the Temple Building on Monday night.

And it surely is going to be a big and merry outing. At last meeting a committee was appointed to complete arrangements for the entertainment of the excursionists in Buffalo. This committee, Ben Panter and B. Snow, reported that arrangements were going forward swimmingly. Special rates have been secured for meals at Statler's, the big restaurant, and the Toronto people taking in the excursion will be given an automobile trip through Buffalo's most interesting sections for a small sum beyond the excursion ticket. All around, the day's programme promises to be most enjoyable. Some attractive posters are to be issued shortly, advertising the event, and even a larger crowd than usual is expected. Several of the local wholesale houses have signified their intention of donating souvenirs for the occasion and the probability is that the excursionists will be pretty well tagged by the time they get to Buffalo.

After the business of the picnic was disposed of, trade matters in general were discussed in the jocular way customary to these jolly fellows in the association. Particular reference was made in regard to the new scale of prices issued by the canners and the general opinion expresseh was that they should go light on the buying end to see how matters would develop during the summer. No action, however, was taken. The meeting was even a less informal one than usual on Monday evening and broke up even a little earlier.

Something doing in canned goods this year has been the slogan of a number of the grocer's correspondents, and it has started. Canned corn at 5c. a tin is one special noticed in Guelph and today the prices for the season are out and right now on the start get the brand you want and also see that it is the brand, and no monkey shining.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 9 a.m. Thursday, June 18, 1908.)

POINTERS—

New prices for 1908 pack tomatoes, corn, beans and peas.
Cornmeal—Advanced.
White Beans—Advancing.
Butter—Local market weak and somewhat demoralized.

The local market is quiet and there are few changes of importance, the chief interest attaching to the announcement of prices of 1908 pack of four different vegetables. In every case these show a marked reduction from prices obtaining for 1907 pack and the indications seem to point to lower prices for most lines of canned vegetables and fruits.

Business is fairly active, but, as has been the case for some months, the trade are still disposed to hold off until the 1908 crop is absolutely assured. Prospects were never brighter at this time of the year, and there is an optimistic spirit abroad which cannot fail very soon to have a quickening effect on business enterprise. Wholesale houses report collections being promptly met in nearly all sections and while business is not overly active, it is in healthy condition.

CANNED GOODS—As noted above, new prices have been announced for the 1908 pack of tomatoes, corn, beans and peas. These will be ready for delivery by October at latest. The trade welcomes a return to lower prices, as the high figures obtaining during the last year have checked consumption. Quotations are :

THE EGG'S FOOD VALUE.

Apart from its convenience to the housekeeper pressed for time, the egg has a distinctive food value which should make it part of the daily menu for every family. A given weight of egg contains more nourishment than three and a half times its weight in milk and about half its weight in good fat meat.

The yolk of an egg is more nourishing than the white, as it contains much less water and a large percentage of fat, of which the white has none.

While the greatest nourishment is to be had in the raw egg, says the Washington Post, it sometimes proves quite indigestible. Many persons are made bilious by eating eggs in any form. This is sometimes counteracted by mixing the egg with a little acid, as orange juice or lemon when used raw, and by adding the tiniest pinch of soda in cooking.

Many persons who cannot eat a soft boiled egg can digest readily one that is cooked for half an hour, though the usual belief is that this is the most indigestible form.

A light, well made omelet is probably the most easily digested of all cooked eggs, which is unfortunate, as it is about the hardest way to prepare them.

The idea that one cannot eat eggs is often but a notion, as has been proved time and again when an egg and milk diet is ordered. Occasionally they make one quite ill, in which case the prescribing physician can always give a corrective.—New York Commercial.

EFFECTIVE WINDOW DRESSING

Soap Displays in a North Toronto Grocery—The Window as an Advertising Medium.

During the past couple of months grocery stores in Montreal, Toronto, and throughout Ontario and Quebec have been displaying attractive windows more or less similar to the one shown in the engraving on this page. The displays have been well worked up and have illustrated several of the points of ideal window dressing. The windows here illustrated appeared in J. A. Hopkins' store at the corner of Main and Dovercourt Road, one of Toronto's most modern groceries, recently, and attracted a good deal of attention.

W. D. Wilmott, of the MacLaren Cheese Co., Toronto, who dressed this window, and also the others which have been placed in the city, gives the following details as to its construction:

"The window consists of a border of Brownies dancing on a clothes line, which entirely encircles the window. On the bottom of the window is placed a facsimile of the soap wrapper and the background is filled in with cartons representing piles of "Surprise" soap. The prevailing colors are yellow and red, although posters with a yellow, red and blue combination are employed to advantage. Premium books and cut-outs are also used to fill in bare spaces, and the piles of cartons can be varied to suit the requirements and size of the window."

One or two of the best points about these windows, from the standpoint of the window dresser, might be mentioned. In showing one article they leave an impression which would not be made by a number of different articles. It is often advisable to dress a window occasionally with one line of goods, particularly if the goods shown are something special, or something which it is desired to run off quickly. Again, the windows are not crowded. Just enough material has been used to fill the window and to tell the story of the goods without giving an impression of overcrowding. The windows too, with the lithographed posters and border are attractive enough to cause a second glance from a passerby.

ATTRACTIVE WINDOWS FROM A NORTH TORONTO GROCERY.

THE WINDOW DRESSER'S IMAGINATION.

Imagination is a principal ingredient in the successful window dresser's composition. The man who has this gift can cultivate it to a great extent and must do so if he is to be successful in his work.

Imitation, too, comes in to good advantage, for after a man has copied well the efforts of others, and perhaps tried to improve on them, he will find himself able to think out schemes of his own. If you have imagination and a well developed power of imitation, you will be able to always bring out something novel in your trims. The importance of making a complete change every time the window is dressed, and of dressing the windows often, is well known by us all.—Maritime Merchant.

WINDOW DRESSING SUGGESTIONS

The desire for possession is one of the strongest human characteristics. The man or woman who sees a good article tastily put on view, if it is seasonable and suited to their needs, will long to own it. They may purchase it at once, or make a mental note of the store and return later. The man who can exhibit goods so that those who see them want them for their own, is the man who becomes a successful window trimmer and who draws trade to his establishment. Display seasonable goods, for which there is a demand or soon will be. Set your goods in attractive surroundings. A beautiful easy chair, marked with a low price, but shown in the middle of a meadow, would not tempt anyone to buy it. But place the chair, marked with the same price, in a cosy corner, beside a grate fire, with pipe racks on the wall, and a table with magazines, or work-box, close at hand, and that chair will possess attractions on a fall and winter day which many a man or woman will find it impossible to resist.

CHEAP TEAS

Extract from the May Circular of Messrs. Kearley & Tonge Ltd., Colombo—

"The estimated shipments for May are placed at twelve million lbs., most of which will be teas of poor quality, for at the time of issue, arrivals, particularly from the Low-country estates, are worse in quality than we have seen for some years."

Extracts from letters received from Messrs. Rodewald & Heath, Colombo, May 7th.

"Now quality is terrible and we have therefore not bought anything since No. 95."

May 14th—"Quality is again worse, many teas from low and medium elevations being quite sour, and we cannot see our way to recommend anything."

Since these letters were written the market for low grade teas has declined about a ha'penny. Is it any wonder? Since I have been in business I have never had such bad reports from Ceylon.

Now I know that efforts are being made to force as much as possible of this tea into Canada. Samples of this trash are already being shown. I am writing this as a note of warning, so any who are tempted by low prices (and most of us are) will do well to test the teas very carefully, not only from samples but when the teas arrive as these very poor teas which may appear sound on arrival may quickly turn sour and prove a total loss.

P.S.—My customers know that every pound of Red Rose Tea in packages and Estabrooks' Blends, both Black and Green, in bulk, are guaranteed fully up to the high standards of quality and are always returnable at full price if in any way unsatisfactory, and it occurs to me that this is worth stating again here as with so much bad tea likely to be on the market many more merchants may wish to avail themselves of our guarantee, and save themselves any worry.

Montreal, June 18.

It was observed some time ago that the consumption of cheese in England was falling off. At first the Canadian shippers were somewhat skeptical regarding such a condition but substantiative evidence has arrived in this country which goes to prove that such is really the condition existing in England.

The Englishman is very constant in his tastes and distates and cheese has always been one of the foundation stones of England's dietetary programme.

Exporters here have been paying, locally, ⅛c to ¼c per lb. more than can be bought in England. With not any too roseate an outlook for the future there is the comforting assurance that the other sources of cheese in England will fall off somewhat before long. Although the demand is not very large at present when a shortage prevails it is expected the Canadian shippers will get a chance if their supply is equal to the demand and they may be in a position to dictate prices. Up to the present time the receipts of cheese have been disappointing which is due primarily to a shortage of the milk supply. By this it must not be taken that each individual cow is not doing its duty, but there is a decided shortage of cows. With all these disadvantages it is fair to say that the yield according to the means available will be ahead of last year. The attractive prices which the Australian and New Zealand houses are offering is diverting attention from the Canadian product. Advices from the Old Country report small stocks. So a little preparation and waiting by Canadian shippers may result. In view of the above outlook, which is rather on the optimistic side, the words of a gentleman recently arrived from England sound decidedly pessimistic when he states that "the glory of the cheese trade in Canada has departed and that it has seen its best days." This gentleman claims that the New Zealand exporters were getting the best of the market owing to closer application to the English requirements. While perhaps this may be a too pessimistic view of the situation it may be said with perfect certainty that the Antipodean exporters would become a very serious menace to the Canadian trade if a certain degree of carelessness of the English requirements which has crept into the Canadian trade were not eliminated. One peculiar incident in the cheese trade may be noted and that is, the loss of 1,800 boxes which were going to the English, without affecting the market in the slightest degree. This fact goes to show that the supplies in England must have been ample and it is also significant that Canada so far has shipped very little, therefore, New Zealand is keeping her so well supplied that large amounts can disappear indiscriminately without affecting the market. This fact certainly contains a warning to the Canadian shippers. Shipments of cheese from Montreal during the last week were 52,881 boxes as compared with 44,555 boxes for the previous week and 73 279 boxes for the corresponding week of last year.

The butter market has been rather featureless during the week with the exception of the fact that a large order from England arrived which immediately advanced the market ¼c to ½c and put the market beyond any export business. This condition of affairs is unfortunate because this immediate stiffening of prices will drive the English buyers off instead of cultivating the English market. Prices range around 22¼c to 22½c. Exports for the last week amounted to 1,874 packages as compared with 1,522 packages for the previous week. Total shipments since May 1, 3,396 packages as compared with 295 packages for corresponding period of last year. The above record certainly compares very favorably with last year and it seems regrettable this record cannot be maintained.

Receipts for the week ending June 13, 1908, were 18,956 packages against 15,424 packages for 1907 for the same week. For the year 1908 up to date, 56,039 packages as compared with 71.-939 packages for corresponding period of last year.

Toronto, June 17.

There is little new to report in the situation among Canadian packers this week. The British market is holding its own and exhibits no notable features. It still continues well stocked with Danish bacon and consequently offers no lively demand for the Canadian product. Last week Danish shipments aggregated 42,-000, which is about the average weekly deliveries. American shipments, too, were about as usual and in all mounted up to 12,000 boxes.

Under these conditions the Canadian packers have not kept very busy supplying the export demand. Some bacon has been going forward, of course, but the shipments have not been at all large.

Local demand, however, seems to be a little more brisk. Packers state that deliveries have been rather more free during the week under review and when it is known that prices offered are from 20 to 30 cents higher than a week ago, it will be seen that something is offering stimulation. Part of this may be accounted for by the fact that a higher American market is drawing off some of the goods which have been coming to this market. It is said, too, that the opening of the north shore district by means of the new C.P.R. line will mean considerable new business in provisions as heretofore shipping facilities to the districts were poor. This will reflect, of course, particularly to the benefit of Toronto packing houses.

Prices offered for hogs this week are $6.10 f.o.b. and $6.35 off cars at factory.

"The past week has witnessed quite a change in the speculative market for hog products. Receipts of hogs were a little lighter and prices higher, but not light, except at the centres where floods have blocked railway transportation. Kansas City being practically shut off. But there has been a great deal of bull talk in the air, notwithstanding stocks are still large and not decreasing to any extent and consumption is still small and not increasing. Shorts have been the chief buyers on the advance, after the packers started it, and the latter have been the chief sellers after it began, looking very much as if they have worked up this boom to sell futures, notwithstanding they are predicting lighter run of summer hogs. Cash demand certainly did not come in at the advance and it looks like a speculative movement, started by the packers and as they are the chief holders of the stock the conclusion is natural that they want to sell and they have been unable to do so.

As to the hog supply there is no evidence that it is likely to run lighter than usual, except that the average weight of hogs is falling off and has been for some time past, indicating premature marketing, as prices of hogs are high and should induce feeding. But corn is relatively higher than hogs and has been for months and this may, together with the Government's overestimate of corn back in farmers' hands, be suf-

TORONTO.

PROVISIONS—A fair business is being done this week and one slightly improved over a week ago, though trading would be better were there a continued spell of warm weather. Fresh meat is now so high that consumption is very light, and provision men expect a demand for bacon lines in consequence, especially as prices compare so favorably with fresh meat lines. Lard has declined a quarter of a cent and hams are slightly firmer.

BUTTER—A speculative demand keeps up the price of all grades of butter, for the supply is more than sufficient to meet present and immediate demands. Last year money was to be made in butter because very little was made and less packed, so that retailers had to pay big prices during the winter and spring. This year the farmer is making butter and the retailer is buying direct and packing—each of them believing there will be just as much money to be made this year as last. The consequence is that butter that should be around 14c is selling for 19c. One thing is pretty certain, and that is, that prices will be lower during the coming winter than during the past.

EGGS—A continued firm price rules the market this week. The supplies have declined somewhat and the quality is not up to past years. Some packing is being done, but the high prices prevailing are making dealers somewhat afraid. Retailers are not buying eggs direct, as they are butter, preferring to trade with a dealer who candles his eggs. Prices are expected to be easier before another week comes round.

Eggs, new laid	0 17½	0 18

CHEESE—Old lines are a little firmer, but speaking generally the market is rather light. New cheese is slightly easier and the offerings are increasing somewhat.

POULTRY—A quiet market prevails and until the warm weather is over no great business will be done. Very little dressed fowl are offering, dealers preferring to handle live birds on account of the difficulty in keeping dead fowl. The quotations below are for live weight.

BUTTER—The local market is still in very unsatisfactory condition owing to cutting in creamery butter and oversupply of dairy. Produce buyers are offering 17c per lb. for No. 1 and 14c for No. 2 f.o.b. Winnipeg.

EGGS—Produce houses are still paying 15c per dozen f.o.b. Winnipeg.

Flour Generally Dull, With No Brighter Outlook—Cereal Business Fair—Lower Prices Allow Larg er Export Business.

Continued large offerings of grain, with little demand have served to keep the markets dull in nearly all lines during the week. Farmers are taking advantage of the fine weather and a time when their summer's work is pressing them a little less heavily and are bringing in large quantities of grain. While prices offered for this are low, they seem quite ready to dispose of what grain they have.

With the light local demand millers generally are not at all active and at present there is apparently no outlook for brisker business. Prices to the retailer in all lines are unchanged from last week.

The one redeeming feature of the situation is that the lower prices of the last couple of weeks are allowing of considerable export business. Shipments of both flour and oatmeal of some quantity have been made to Great Britain this week, and at present prices demand from overseas points is better.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—The local market is very good, a fair volume of trade passing, which is made up of small-sized orders. Prices remain the same as at the last quotation. Enquiries from the country may be said to have been somewhat brighter during the week. It is thought the volume of trade and prices will remain fairly constant for some time.

BEST SEASON FOR QUARTER CENTURY.

Large Catches in Nova Scotia Fisheries Aid General Business.

The present season is turning out splendidly for the fisheries of Nova Scotia, as is evidenced in the following letter, which came in this week from a correspondent of The Grocer in Halifax. He says: "The fishermen of the province are reaping a bountiful harvest this season. All along the coast enormous catches are being made of mackerel, and on the Banks the catches of cod and haddock are very large. At some points on the coast the mackerel fishing is unprecedented. The buyers of fresh fish have more than they can handle and they have refused to purchase any more. The fishermen, in consequence, have been obliged to salt the fish down. At Arichat and the fishing settlements along Chebucto Bay, the supply of barrels and salt became exhausted, so large were the catches. During the present week nineteen vessels of the Lunenburg fleet arrived at their home port from the Banks, bringing in over 15,000 quintals of fish, valued at nearly $100,000. The prosperity of the fisheries makes business good all round and the present season so far is the best for a quarter of a century.

HAVE CONFIDENCE IN YOURSELF.

Don't ask for a position as though you were begging in behalf of a church fair. When offering your services to an employer, remember that you are worth as much to him as he is to you. Prove to him that the salary he pays is a safe investment which will yield liberal dividends.

A young man came into my office the other day, and before I really knew what he wanted I had listened to a most pitiful tale about a crippled father, a sickly mother, and seven younger sisters, all of whom, at that very moment, were home crying for bread. The young man would make an excellent beggar, but an exceptionally weak candidate for a position.

In applying for a position use the tactics of every successful salesman. Be tactful and enthusiastic, and, above all things, don't misrepresent your goods.—H. J. Hapgood.

is hard to attain, but we have attained it in the manufacture of soda biscuits. If this were untrue, we should be open to ridicule for having so often stated it. But the moment you put a piece of Mooney's Perfection Cream Soda into your mouth you realize that it is superior to any soda biscuit you ever tasted before anywhere. Try it—we'll leave it to the goods to prove our statement.

A MARKET FOR EAST TORONTO.

Proposal to Form a Co-operative Association and Erect Large Building.

A central market for farmers produce is proposed to be located in East Toronto, and the proposition is being much talked about by the merchants of that town. Mayor McMillan is taking a foremost part in launching the scheme. The plan as proposed is to build a three or four-storey structure in the centre of the town, costing about $10,000. The front of the lower part would be devoted to three stores, while at the back would be accommodation for horses and rigs and all around would be set apart for market purposes. The upper stories of the building would be devoted to hotel purposes, no liquor, however, being allowed to be sold; that is, there would be a large dining-room on one floor, and above that would be sleeping rooms.

The intention is to form a co-operative association composed of merchants and farmers who will subscribe the stock. In fact, those behind the scheme say they have enough money now in hand to make a beginning; have already purchased a lot on Main Street on which to erect the building, and have asked an architect to prepare plans.

The proposition is looked upon favorably by merchants in the centre of the town, but those on the leading thoroughfares away from Main Street do not regard it so favorably as they believe it will to some extent take away their trade.

The promoters of the scheme say that if the plan does not go through as a co-operative association they will form a syndicate and carry out their proposition.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Immense Quantities of Strawberries Offering—New Peaches, Plums and Apricots From California—New and Old Potatoes—Pacific Coast Fish.

The Canadian small fruit season has opened in earnest, and the markets in various sections of the country report great quantities of berries of excellent quality. Toronto and Montreal are receiving Niagara Peninsula berries and those on the north shore will be found on sale in many parts of Ontario before the week is out.

There was a rumor that the crop in Essex County, in the vicinity of the Detroit River and Lake Erie, had been somewhat burnt with too much sun, but reports from other sections say berries are first-class.

California fruit—peaches, plums and apricots—in fancy packages, is arriving and navel oranges have gone.

In the vegetable line, tomatoes continue to hold the strong position. Cabbage is still arriving freely, and new potatoes are much in evidence, though somewhat firmer than a week ago. Old potatoes, too, have firmed up some, the supplies not being so great as a week ago.

Pacific coast fish is now on sale in various parts of the country. The Eastern markets report increased prices in many lines of fish, but in the Western markets the prices are unchanged, and the dried varieties are not offering. Business has been fair and much above the average.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—The first car of the season containing apricots, peaches and plums has arrived in the city. Pineapples are stronger this week, having advanced 20c in the minimum, and 10c in the maximum price. Bananas remain steady at $2 to $2.25. Canadian strawberries are now being quoted at 12c to 13c per quart, while Marylands remain at 15c per basket. Other lines remain as at last quotation. The demand has been good during the past week.

VEGETABLES—The vegetable market has not presented many new features during the week, everything remaining about the same, with the exception of Boston lettuce, which has gone forward slightly, also new cabbage. Radishes are slightly cheaper. New potatoes have eased off some during the week. Texas tomatoes are now being quoted at $1 and $1.25 in 4-basket flat crates. The demand during the week has been fairly good.

FISH—Fish has advanced in many lines during the last week, with perhaps two exceptions, where there have been declines, one of which is Gaspe salmon, which is arriving freely now, and the price is somewhat easier, having dropped two cents. The other exception is whitefish, which is two cents lower than at last quotation. Haddock, mackerel, B.C. salmon and haddies have advanced from ½c to 2c per lb. Oysters in quart tins also have advanced to 40c. The demand during the last week has been fairly good.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS — Strawberries, loads of them, are on the market this week. They come generally from the Niagara Peninsula, though some few lots are in from Bronte and the district about Oakville. The Canadian berries have entirely displaced the imported variety, and such immense quantities are offering that the price has come down greatly—as low as eight cents being quoted—and the quality is first-class.

California apricots, plums and peaches are arriving, the first car coming in from Vacaville, Cal., on Monday last. Navel oranges are off the market, late Valencias taking their place. Pines are a little firmer, and watermelons slightly easier.

LOBSTERS GROWING SCARCER.

A correspondent of the Fishing Gazette on the coast of Maine says "that notwithstanding the statistics of production the men in the business know that lobsters are growing scarcer each year. The statistics of the annual catch do not reveal all the facts. Thirty years ago lobster fishing on the Maine coast was confined to the inside grounds, or from three to five miles from shore. Then only rowboats and sailboats were used and no man could tend more than forty pots. For a pot not only must be lifted each day to see if it contains lobsters, but it must be moved around constantly to find the places where lobsters are plentiful. To-day, with gasoline boats, the outer field is used more than the inner field. Some catchers go out as far as fifteen miles and fish in thirty-five fathoms of water. Moreover, a man will tend one hundred pots, owing to the rapid movements of the gasoline boat. Thus the volume of lobsters is kept up by improved methods and increased labor, so the statistics of the annual catch are not proof that the supply is not becoming exhausted."

FACTS ABOUT GROCERIES

Useful Information for Grocers and Clerks Regarding the Goods They Sell—Something About Cotton Seed Oil and Its Products.

A thousand things pleasing, useful, meritorious and highly prized in the mechanics and arts have within the past thirty years emanated from the frowsy cotton seed, at one time considered practically useless by the cotton growers in the Sunny South. Step by step have these things been attained. Days and months have the chemists toiled to reach the goal of success. Millions of dollars were expended to extract the virtues that were known to exist in the little brown embryo that ignorance wasted and continued blindly wasting until science intervened and turned the river of waste into a sea of gold.

Columbus found cotton in use by the natives when he touched America's shores in 1492. Cortez mentions it as being rudely manufactured into cloth by the Mexican Indians.

The snow-white bolls were found growing wild in Texas and the lower Mississippi Valley as early as 1536. Virginia colonists cultivated it as long ago as 1621. No one dreamed then that it would be a world commodity—no one thought of the value of the seed.

Contrasting the wastefulness of those days with the economies of the present, and the various uses to which the seed and its component parts are put, is the purpose of this article.

The enormity of the sum that is now obtained from a material that thirty years ago was deemed of small consequence, is scarcely comprehensible. Some idea of this can be gained from the fact that one company alone, with a chain of factories in various States, exports annually cotton seed oil and its products to the value of $50,000,000.

From the cotton seed come compound lard, cooking oil, salad oil and soap oil, chemically pure, nourishing and healthful.

The lard is recognized as a mixture of cotton oil and beef stearine, and produces a vegetable product that is unequalled.

Having the indorsement of leading physicians, the cooking oil, which is made strictly without smell or taste, ranks high for the use of persons suffering from indigestion or weak stomachs.

Prior to the enactment of the United States Pure Food Law cotton seed oil was exported in large quantities and returned to America as olive oil, having had 20 per cent. of olive oil mixed with it, and then sold at the price of pure olive oil. The profit to the adulterators on the other side was enormous, as the cotton oil sold for 46 cents a gallon, as against $2 a gallon for olive oil.

Pure cotton seed oil, as obtainable today under the protection of the Pure Food Act, is preferred for salad purposes to olive oil, it being readily assimilated and of lasting benefit to weak stomachs.

Stearine, which comes from the pressing of salad oil under ice, is a natural butter by its consistency and taste. Nearly all of this is sold in Holland to manufacturers of butterine, who ship it to England, where it has a large sale.

Toilet soaps of the highest grade, the use of which imparts to the flesh the softness and smoothness of the babe's cheek, are made of oil from the seed that was thirty years ago looked upon as worthless.

Cotton seed meal with its agreeable nutty flavor, is, from the agriculturist's point of view, the most important, because it has proved the best food for live stock. It enriches the product of the dairy and imparts to the cattle the smooth, sleek, glossy hide so highly prized by dairymen who take pride in the appearance of their stock.

Thousands of tons of cotton seed meal are used annually by tobacco growers and planters in the Connecticut Valley, New England States, Pennsylvania, Virginia and wherever the prized weed is cultivated.

A fine, light-colored leaf that commands the highest price results from the use of the cotton seed meal, and the most successful tobacco growers sow prime cotton seed meal on their land broadcast immediately after ploughing. —New York World.

means a friend for the grocer. It is just as true that the sale of inferior goods in the long run loses friends for the grocer. Then why take chances of losing trade by passing out cheap and inferior stove polishes when the best stove polishes may be sold you at a good profit and help make friends for you every day.

That is a good reason for urging the sale of our very popular RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes and SUN PASTE in Tins. Every package is right when you sell it and makes friends for you and for us day in and day out. Just what you want to push. We know you think so.

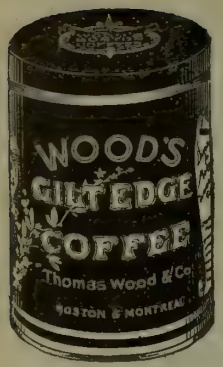
"ROOM AT THE TOP"



ESTABLISHED 1879

An excellent motto for every professional or business man.

Innumerable by-paths promise temporary advantage, but they lead nowhere, except perhaps to disaster.

There was a place "at the top" for

and they stay there, because they have not deviated from the path of Purity and Uniformity in all the changes of Coffee production since the first step of their progress.

More About Peas

Some people imagine that Canadian packed Peas are not as good as peas from France. There was never a greater fallacy. French Peas are largely packed from seed grown in Canada. If you will compare the Canadian with the French pack Peas you will notice that the flavor of the imported Peas is killed by the use of green coloring.

A prominent grocer said that he never ate any Peas but the imported. He was asked if he had ever compared the French with the Canadian Peas. He confessed that he never had. A tin of very ordinary Canadian Standard Peas two or three years old was then opened against a tin of French Peas. The French Peas had the Canadian Peas beaten for color, but for flavor the Canadian pack Peas were much superior, and had a flavor that was entirely lacking in the French Peas. In fact the French Peas were quite unpalatable.

The Canadian Canners' Canned Peas are the finest in the world. They have the field to themselves as regards quality.

Talk Quality in Peas, and educate your customers to buy the better grades. Show them wherein the difference lies. It will pay you well.

The difference in cost is slight, and you can obtain a much larger profit on the better grades.

As Pure as Windsor Salt

$1.00 Sold $25 Worth of Groceries

It was a thirty mile trip to town and the instructions of Mrs. Smith to husband John were to get a dollar's worth of Windsor Salt at the grocer's—naturally husband John secured his entire list of groceries at the store that was stocked with "Windsor." He spent twenty-five dollars in that particular store.

The reason why Mrs. Smith was determined to have Windsor Salt was and is plainly evident—its uniform excellence, purity, whiteness and dryness. It pays to sell the salt that helps to sell other goods in the store.

That's the kind we make—beautiful long threads that will satisfy the most exacting.

An important point, too, is that it does not cost you any more—perhaps not as much—than inferior and poorly-made cocoanut.

TO THE TRADE:

When You are Selling

CEYLON TEA

It is Absolutely Necessary that You Should Lay Particular Stress on the Fact That it

Must Be Judged By Cup Quality

And You Should Show Customers

How To Prepare It

So as to Fairly Test This

The Tea's appearance won't especially commend it; nor will a poorly made infusion.

CORKS AND CAPSULES

Manufacturers, much depends upon the quality of the corks you use. If they are of poor quality and break when pulled the customer is apt to form a poor opinion of your product. By ordering only EWING'S CORKS and CAPSULES you are assured of having the best on the market.

Profitable Goods

Are the goods that are a little better than the others: goods that will make sales where the others won't. Ozo Brand Pickles are good pickles, and show their quality. We have special facilities for turning out the best pickles, and we have made the most of them. For instance, we provide the seed from which the vegetables are grown and so get the best from the start; the cucumbers go straight from the vine to the factory, so that none of the fresh crispness is lost. We make our own vinegar and it cannot be beaten for pickling purposes. It will certainly pay you to specify that you want our goods when ordering pickles.

Leading Grocers Cutting Out 25c. Tea

After experimenting with bulk and package teas that LOOKED all right to sell for 25c. and which they THOUGHT would suit their customers just as well, several leading grocers that we know of have decided to cut out 25c. tea. These grocers were shrewd enough to notice that they were not selling as much tea as they formerly were, which is the only true test, as

Your Customers don't have to tell you if they don't like your tea, it's easier to try another store.

Because you have sold a 25c. tea for years is no reason why you should continue to do so now when tea at this price has advanced over 5c. per lb. A number of grocers have written me and told my travellers they were surprised that their customers accepted the change so readily, which proves it's easier to cut out 25c. tea than you think it is.

Why not start right now and sell good teas that you know will make satisfied customers ?

Red Rose Tea in Package and Estabrook's Blended Tea in Bulk will please your customers ; and remember, you don't have to try to find a match for each order, as these teas are guaranteed absolutely uniform in quality all the year round.

Write to-day for an order or further particulars.

Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange

Report of the Proceedings of the Annual Meeting Held in Quebec on Wednesday and Thursday, June 17 and 18—The "Guild" is no more and Organization Rejoices in New Name—Visitors Royally Entertained by Quebec Members of Trade—Next Meeting at Winnipeg or Victoria—Some of the Addresses.

In quaint old Quebec, the scene of many an historic meeting between the white man and the red, where the pipe of peace has been smoked in token of good fellowship between the aborigines and the early settlers, the newly-christened Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange held its annual meeting on Wednesday and Thursday, June 17 and 18.

It was fitting that in this year of Quebec's jubilee, when the eyes of Canadians, Englishmen and the people of the United States are directed towards the historic spot where Wolfe and Montcalm blended their hearts' blood in a struggle for the cause of their respective sovereigns, and in their heroic deaths laid the foundation of an empire whose political, religious and commercial unification on lines of justice and equity is the marvel of the world, that the commercial interests of such a large branch of trade as the grocery field should be deliberated upon. And so the wise men of the Maritime Provinces joined hands across the continent, and with their intermediate friends in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Calgary and Alberta, met in friendly discussion on matters of trade vitally interesting not only to themselves, but also to the trade generally. That these annual deliberations are bearing fruit and bettering the conditions of the grocery trade in its entirety from the manufacturer, through the jobber, retailer and consumer, those who have noticed the improved conditions during the past ten or fifteen years must admit. It is an acknowledged impossibility for men in even the same lines of trade to see eye to eye on every question affecting their interests, but it is also a true axiom that only by discussion and comparison of mutual interests can harmony and justice be secured. That the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild or now the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, has by its annual deliberations and its desire to eliminate certain serious objections to trade that have been detrimental to everyone interested, the manufacturer, jobber, retailer and consumer, been doing good work and the fact that the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada is recognizing the influence of the Canada Grocers' Exchange is evidenced by their harmonious co-operation in vital trade matters, is wortny of recognition by all.

The "Guild" is No More.

The Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild is no more, and in its place is the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange. It was a grand meeting, and most successful in every respect. The attendance was splendid, members being present from all parts of Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

As Percy Wollaston, Jr., Victoria, remarked when he was introduced to H. G. Bauld, Halifax, it was "hands across the continent."

And was there a good time? Never better. Quebecers are magnificent entertainers, and they did everything to make the stay of the visiting wholesalers as pleasant a one as possible. There was not a dull moment from the time the boat left Montreal until it arrived there on its return trip.

At the convention there were thirty-nine wholesale grocers, besides the secretaries of the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange and the Nova Scotia Guild, and several manufacturers and brokers, making the entire attendance about fifty.

The contingent from Victoria, Winnipeg, Hamilton, London, Brantford, Toronto, Kingston, Joliette and Montreal, met in Montreal and went down Tuesday evening on the magnificent R. & O. steamer "Montreal," returning Thursday evening by the "Quebec." Those coming from Halifax, New Glasgow, Fredericton and St. John arrived in Quebec on Tuesday.

Quebec in the Public Eye.

Certainly Quebec is occupying a very prominent place these days. Always before has it been in the minds of the public as a city of historic interest, and a centre where one was always treated in princely fashion, but this year Quebec is discussed every day.

First and greatest of all, the ancient city will hold the wonderful tercentenary celebrations, which will draw people from all over the civilized world, over an hundred thousand. Great preparations are being made, and hundreds of thousands of dollars are being spent in this connection. Then there is the almost assured prospect that Quebec will have the honor of possessing Canada's National Park—the battlefields of the Plains of Abraham.

There is the Laval celebration also, which drew thousands to the city on the occasion of the unveiling of the monument erected in memory of that noble dignitary and historic character, Monsignor Laval.

And last, but not by any means least, has not the city been honored with the presence of half a hundred wholesale grocers, members of the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, assembled there in annual convention?

But nobody will say that Quebec and those who reside there, do not deserve all they are receiving, however much they may envy them.

An Excellent Programme.

It was an excellent business meeting, the programme drawn up containing most interesting subjects for discussion, such as the desired new Bill of Lading; Settlement of Claims for Loss or Damage of Goods by Railways, and Methods of Handling Goods at Flag Stations. Besides there were a number of most interesting papers read, which dealt in an able manner with matters of vital importance to the grocery trade of the country. These papers are reproduced on the following pages.

It is a toss-up where the next meeting will be. A jaunt to Western Canada is assured, for either Victoria or Winnipeg will be the honored city. Victoria was chosen, with Winnipeg as an alternative, in case it was found impossible to secure a good attendance for a convention in Victoria. Next year's gathering will be some time in June.

L. E. Geoffrion, of L. Chaput, Fils & Cie., Montreal, is the new president, succeeding that able officer, H. C. Beckett, of W. H. Gillard & Co., Hamilton.

The Opening Session.

President Beckett called the meeting to order in the Auditorium, St. John Street, on Wednesday morning at ten o'clock. L. A. Carrier, M.P., the president of the Quebec Province Guild, extended a hearty welcome to the visitors, as follows:

ADDRESS OF WELCOME.

By L. A. Carrier, M.P. for Levis County, of A. Carrier & Fils, Levis.

Mr. President and Members of the Dominion Grocers' Guild of Canada:

As President of the Quebec Guild, I take great pleasure in tendering you today a most hearty welcome. We are happy to have you amongst us, and visiting our quaint, historic old city, when she is looking at her best, and at a season of the year when nature seems to embellish all that makes this favored spot so attractive to the eye and mind with its glorious and tender memories of the past.

Yes, gentlemen, you are now on sacred ground, you are in the city which for three centuries has made the history of this beautiful country, Canada, read as a novel, and from where modern writers of fiction are taking their heroes who have in our past history performed deeds of gallantry and valor.

A Patriotic Aside.

We are meeting to-day, gentlemen, to attend to matters pertaining to the wholesale grocery trade it is true, and in the interest of the Dominion Grocers' Guild we will have two days for discussing the various subjects contained in the excellent programme laid before us. We will discuss our private mutual interests, commercialism, and, I might add, the almighty dollar, but allow me this digression if I introduce some side issue and a little poetry to this meeting. With your permission I will read part of an article which I cut out of the London

Daily Mail of May 25th last, which will confirm my statement that you are here on sacred ground:

"The sword that raged round the feudal walls of Quebec is buried under the stately column of Wolfe and Montcalm—the heroes of Britain and France. Valor gave them a common death; history a common fame; posterity a common monument. The spirit of the Province is enshrined in this noble epitaph and in the flag—white, sewn with fleurs de lys, the emblem of the past, and with maple the emblem of the present. And beneath the Imperial crown the device, "Je me souveins." French-Canadians remember that old Catholic France placed them on the banks of the St. Lawrence. Therefore they speak the Norman tongue and hold the faith of France. They remember, too, that Britain gave them liberty and a share in the Empire. Therefore they are proud to live under her flag. 'Our hearts may be French, but our heads are English,' and it is the head that wins."

I have just returned from the Old Country, and it was my good fortune to attend and witness the reception in London on the 25th of May last of the President of the French Republic, M. Fallieres. I was profoundly impressed by the sincerity and earnestness of the English nation in greeting the representative of that other great nation. France now on such friendly terms with themselves, and with your permission, I will again read the editorial of another London paper, on the day of this reception and entitled, "London's Welcome":

"M. Fallieres landed yesterday under the grey skies of our broken and belated summer. The welcome that awaited him lacked nothing in warmth and spontaneity. Whether he looked to the Ministers who awaited him at Victoria or to the crowds which greeted him outside, he must have realized that the people of this country hail in him the worthy and popular head of our best friend in Europe. The entente cordiale was from the first a popular movement. The statesmen in both countries who gave it shape did but obey an impulse from the popular mind. Based broadly on such foundations, the entente has grown into a bond lighter and more spontaneous than any alliance, but not a whit less binding. No formal treaty could have created of itself the good-will and the sympathy which exists to-day between the two nations. We can conceive of no probable strain which could break this concord, and no demand on our loyalty from which we should shrink. Such friendships are possible only between peoples who enjoy like institutions, and view the world's affairs from a common standpoint. England and France have been leaders in European movement towards liberty. Their mutual influence in literature, in politics and in science was never closer than it is to-day. In the person of M. Fallieres, kindly, dignified, and essentially modest, we honor a republic that stands in Europe for the principles of peace and democracy, which are the guiding stars of all that is best in our own strivings."

You are here, gentlemen, in French Canada, in a city where nine-tenths of the population are French-Canadians, and where the majority of the members of the Guild are also French-Canadians and these are also our sentiments, which we wish to extend to you as descendants of the great Anglo-Saxon race, and to state that we are earnestly striving to work with you towards making this, our country of adoption, great and prosperous, and the pride of the Imperial family.

Of A. Carrier & Fils, Levis.

President Beckett then replied in the following address :

The cordial welcome of the Quebec Guild to the wholesale grocers of the Dominion—the delightful hospitality of competitors in business—the good wishes that our visit may be pleasant—the hope expressed that the result of our deliberations may be profitable—the holding of our annual meeting in the most attractive and historical spot in Canada—are all factors that should have a good influence in making this meeting a record to be proud of.

Your having placed me in this honorable position a little over a year ago made me conscious of the fact that my duty to the members of the Guild (as well as my own firm), was to do all possible to advance the interests of the grocery trade along sound, fair, honest, businesslike lines so much needed for our present and future welfare.

Suffering From Government Indifference.

In some respects a little progress has been made during the past year but unfortunately, on the whole, the trade has seriously suffered by reason of the attitude of the Ontario and Federal Governments in showing such supreme indifference to the commercial needs of our country. The merchants of Canada must surely realize sooner or later the seriousness of the situation. Dishonest business methods have been encouraged by reason of the fact that any effort the trade has made to bring about a better condition than at present exists, had been met by ignorant vicious attacks and charges of combine, conspiracy restriction of trade and so on the effect of which has been to frighten merchants and manufacturers into the belief that they have absolutely no right to safeguard their interests. A question for you to consider is how shall we proceed to bring to the attention of the government a proper realization of its duty to the mercantile interests of this country?

You have all been kept informed by pamphlet and circular letters of various matters of vital interest to the trade.

Relations With Manufacturers.

Our relations with manufacturers are cordial and gradually improving. By slow degrees the manufacturer is realizing more than ever the value of the wholesaler as the cheapest mdium of distribution. The evil and dishonest results consequent upon quantity price is gradually dawning upon him, and the practice of selling a small percentage of retailers at special prices is receiving the attention of the retail trade by a refusal on their part to handle proprietary lines under such conditions.

Unfortunately our healthy progress has been marred by jobbers who refuse to join us in our efforts to raise the trade to a higher standard. They have stood aloof under the belief that we entered into agreements with each other, binding ourselves to sell goods at certain prices, when, as a matter of fact, no such efforts are even seriously discussed at our meetings. It is legally recognized that the manufacturer has the right to sell to whom he pleases, and under any conditions or restrictions as to resale he may deem expedient and necessary to impose. Such right is manifestly necessary, otherwise his business might be ruined.

The manufacturer in marketing his goods has the right to choose whatever medium of distribution may seem to him the most economical. It can be entirely through members of the Guild, or entirely through wholesalers who are not members of the Guild, or it can be direct to the retail trade, or it can be direct to the consumer. He has his choice, and we respect his right, but the members of the Guild do not quite appreciate the situation or they would exercise their rights as individuals and decline to buy from any manufacturer who would not give them a satisfactory guarantee of good faith.

No member of the Guild objects to a manufacturer selling to five per cent. of the retail trade at wholesale prices, as long as he, the manufacturer, sells the other ninety-five per cent. of the retail trade as cheaply.

Notwithstanding misguided belief to the contrary, the Guild, if rightly understood, is a protection to both the retailer and manufacturer.

The principles of the Guild are founded on absolute fairness to manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer, and the few houses and their travelers who try to find favor with the retail merchant by boasting that they belong to no combine, that they belong to no Guild, or association, are admitting their ignorance on such matters and unwittingly insulting the intelligence of the retail merchant.

Greater Knowledge Needed.

What is needed is a greater knowledge on the part of travelers as to the advantages and necessity of trade associations. It is no credit to a man to be so far behind the changed conditions of a trade that he should brag about it. Encouragement and intelligent discussion with the retail man will make for the betterment of the retail grocery trade, and no body of men are in a better position to prove a medium for good and help to the retailer than the commercial traveler. Each province should have a strong committee to preach the gospel of business fairness to every manufacturer. Such committee should be well informed in the principles for which the Guild stands, should be strong and consistent in their attitude towards manufacturers, and should report regularly to the members the result of their interviews.

Manufacturers should be reminded that neither they nor society has any claim upon the wholesale grocer to perform the function of distributing groceries at cost or less than cost. It should be clearly pointed out to the manufacturer that price cutting on proprietary lines destroys all interest on the part of the jobber and salesmen and works for the manufacturer's final destruction.

If the wholesale grocers of the Dominion have the machinery, representing as it does an investment of over $20,000 000 of capital, and the manufacturer wants the benefit of such an enormous investment he should be prepared to pay reasonably for such valuable service. The trouble is we have not displayed the courage, patience and resolution necessary to take hold of this matter as its importance warrants. In theory we believe in the effectiveness and benefit of united action. Then why not work out this theory instead of struggling for an existence because of the apathy and indifference of those who want to plough their lonely furrow or paddle their own canoe?

The New Bill of Lading.

With regard to the proposed new bill of lading to be based on lines of fairness to both shipper and carrier. Substantial progress is now being made. A shippers' committee has been appointed by the shipping interests to work out a bill of lading that will meet with the approval and endorsation of the Railway Board. This same committee will also bring before the Railway Board flag station difficulties and settlement of claims for loss, damage and pilferage. The work is laborious and will take some time and many meetings, but it has assumed practical shape, thanks to the businesslike methods and suggestions of the Railway Commission for Canada.

Tobacco Profits.

Considerable work has been done, and you have been kept informed by letter of the efforts put forth to secure at least a margin sufficient to cover the cost of selling. With united and enthusiastic assistance there is hope that an improvement can be shown on this line, but it needs your hearty co-operation to bring it about.

H. C. BECKETT

Of W. H. Gillard & Co., Hamilton, the Retiring President.

Private Labels and Trade Marks.

Full particulars have been sent you as to the result of the efforts put forth to prevent unfair legislation, and our success in this respect is due to the interest taken in the matter by Guild members writing their Parliamentary representatives, and to the kindly offices of Mr. Adam Zimmerman, M.P. for Hamilton.

A Great Educational Work.

The Guild has a great educational work before it and it is important to the success of the grocery trade that members take a deeper interest than ever in an effort to inspire greater confidence in each other.

Our troubles are largely due to the fact that a strong effort is ever present to find the weak spot in a traveler's make-up, and by suggestion and innuendo convince him that his firm is being regularly undersold by a competitor. The confidence and respect the house and the traveler have in their customer makes the situation difficult to unravel. The seed of doubt and suspicion is planted and all too readily takes root. At present the crop of suspicion is a stumbling block to our progress, a pitfall we should avoid, and a trap to catch the unwary.

Wise counsels should prevail in dealing with a matter so absolutely vital to the prosperity of the trade with which we are identified.

Experience, close study of the situation, and hours of careful thought must convince us all that the way to remedy evils which exist in business is not to throw up the sponge and acknowledge defeat in a righteous cause, but to consistently and persistently pursue a course along lines creditable to our intelligence as business men.

We are not in business for the sake of making sales at cost and less than cost, as so frequently happens on many lines we handle. The cost of doing business is apt to be lost sight of, and this matter is worthy of careful consideration. In the grocery trade we skate on very thin ice and our efforts should be to choose a safe course. The thoughtful student of our difficulties, the man who remembers the danger spot should be listened to if we wish to land without costly experiment.

Importance of Annual Meetings.

These annual meetings are of such importance and of such value to us that we should place greater value upon them, and feel it our duty to take the time necessary to bring about satisfactory results. The business of this meeting you all have before you, but in addition there are other matters in which we have a common interest, and which might also be profitably taken up.

I would suggest that in our discussions we confine ourselves as exclusively as possible to the subject in hand, and that all resolutions submitted to this meeting be properly written out, with the names of the mover and seconder appearing on the paper. This will expedite matters and avoid confusion.

Let us not be weary of well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. We only meet once a year, so make up your minds to clean up all the business in hand even if it takes a day longer. Don't begrudge the time; it is worth more to you than an absence of a week or two from the office or sample room. We will get better acquainted, think more kindly of each other, and feel better satisfied.

In conclusion I tender my sincere thanks for your kind attention, for the consideration and help you have so kindly given to the carrying on of the good work of the Guild, and bespeak for my successor your hearty support and assistance.

It is to be hoped that wise and sensible counsels will prevail at this meeting, that discussions will be in the true spirit of friendliness, having due regard to each other's opinions.

The Suit Again Discussed.

Almost the first matter discussed after President Beckett had read his interesting opening address was the suit against the Exchange, which is still hanging fire. It was felt that the government was acting in a most unjust manner. As Mr. Hugh Blain explained, they do not seem to understand the real importance of the matter. The case was to have been tried in June, but it had been postponed until September, when it was hoped the matter would be fought out for once and for all.

President Beckett stated that in Ontario the Provincial Guild had a legislation committee, composed of influential business men interested in politics. Such a committee might be formed in connection with the Exchange. This was apropos of a suggestion made by W. G. Craig, Kingston President, Ontario Guild, that a delegation be sent to interview the Federal Government regarding the suit. L. A. Carrier, who sits in the House of Commons for Levis, advised early action in this matter and it was finally decided to appoint a legislation committee, the members of which will be : Messrs. Geoffrion, Turner, Mackenzie, Blain and Bauld, with L. A. Carrier as chairman. This committee will interview the government if they deem it necessary, and through the secretary keep the members posted. It was pointed out that each member should impress upon his local representative, the importance of bringing this matter to a termination.

Splendid Financial Standing.

A most satisfactory financial statement was read, showing the Exchange to be in a good position financially.

The New Bill of Lading.

There was an interesting discussion on the proposed new Bill of Lading. It developed that President Beckett was at the meeting of shippers in Toronto in May, when these men, representing all lines of business in Canada, took up the matter in earnest. Mr. Beckett was appointed a member of the shippers' committee, formed at that time, and this committee is working for a clean bill of lading. They are endeavoring to arrange matters so that the railway will be responsible for goods after they leave the warehouse. In any case a modified and improved bill of lading is expected to be the result of the actions of the committee.

Difficulty in Collecting Claims.

H. G. Bauld, Halifax, opened a fertile field for discussion when he brought up the matter of collecting claims for damaged goods from the railways. He stated that frequently it was found impossible to collect claims for twelve or fifteen months after they had been granted. Most everybody present had experienced similar difficulty. Mr. Bauld instanced a test case which took place down east some years ago. It was shown that owners of ships carrying goods from Liverpool to Halifax were responsible for the safe delivery of the goods to the consignee, from the time they were delivered to the ship until they were delivered by the shipping concern at their destination.

President Beckett, replying to this instance, stated that the Bill of Lading being dealt with at present by the Railway Commission, is that of railways, as they had not the power to interfere with the Bill of Lading of a steamship company, which was regarded as more or less foreign to Canada.

Much difficulty was experienced in collecting claims because one could not be established without witnesses, and it was not always possible to bring on witnesses, owing to the smallness of the claim. The Hamilton Board of Trade had suggested that claims under $200 be disposed of by affiidavit, being tried before a Division Court judge. The Railway Commission, however, has not the power to make any such ruling. It is a matter for parliament.

The proper way to put the matter before the government for decisive action was for the members to give the president figures, showing how thousands of dollars were lost annually to grocery firms alone through uncollected claims. Then something would be done.

The matter of flag stations is being dealt with by the Railway Commission.

Percy Wollaston, jr., of Wilson Bros., Victoria then read one of the most interesting papers heard for a long time, entitled "The Cost of Doing Business."

THE COST OF DOING BUSINESS.

By Percy Wollaston, Jr., of Wilson Bros., Victoria, B.C.

This is a large subject, and one may well hesitate before addressing such a representative body of business men as I see before me to-day, but when it is remembered that the cost of operating is the most important question with which we have to deal; and as it is correctly computed and consistently acted up to, so is a business a success or the reverse; I think we may well spend a little time in its consideration, and I will endeavor as briefly as possible to bring to your attention some phases of the question which may possibly have escaped your notice.

A Fault in Every System.

In my experience, which has been varied, I have found many different methods of computing this cost, from the most hap-hazard way to the most elaborate system of calculation, and in all of these there is the same fault to be found, and that is, the great danger of minimizing the percentage which the carrying on of the business demands should be set aside before it is possible to talk of making a profit.

I believe I am right in saying that many houses in business, in fact, the majority, do not attempt to figure the cost of doing business until the end of the year when stock is taken; then after the balance sheet is made up and the profit calculated, just as a matter of curiosity, the relation which the cost of carrying on a business bears to the gross profits is figured out, and it is found that for that particular year the cost of doing business was 4¾ or 5 or 6 per cent. as the case may be; then another year is entered upon and although the percentage may look high no regular effort is made to discover why it is so high or how it may be reduced.

The item of cost of doing business is a thing which must on no account be overlooked, as if this is, sooner or later the business must go to the wall, and I cannot impress upon you too strongly the advisability of getting at this cost at least once a month, oftener would in many cases be better, as unless this is done it is impossible to keep proper check on the results in the way of profit accruing to the business from each department.

Considering the Travelers.

A great many of us are apt to send our travelers out and on occasionally looking over their sales say to them that their profits are not sufficiently large and that better prices must be obtained, a thing all very good in itself, but whilst we are doing this we are perhaps overlooking items of expense in connection with the internal economy of the business, which go to make up the cost of doing business and which are such a serious drain on the profit and loss account.

In saying this I take it for granted that the sales of each traveler, or from each section of the country, are dealt with separately, the gross profits earned by each man being computed at least monthly, and it is just here that the value of knowing, to a fraction, the cost of doing business comes in. As an illustration I will take the case of a traveler who is doing a large business for his house and who makes an application for a raise of salary. In considering this the one question that presents itself to the house is, can we afford it? Is Mr. A. earning a sufficient profit to permit of an increase in salary? Mr. A. having the question put before him in this form at once says: "Why look at the amount of business I am doing. I am making a profit of about 9 per cent. on an average, of course you can afford it," but when the following figures are shown him, Mr. A. is not so sure that he is making quite as much money as he thought he was.

Total sales for the month		$10 566.93
Total cost	$9,719.86
Less claims for over-charges, etc.	31.23
		9,751.09
Gross profit		$ 815.84
Salary	$125.00
Traveling expenses	139.95
Cost of doing business 4½ per cent. ..	475.47
		740.42
Net profit for the month		$75.42

Gross profit on sales, 8.40 per cent.

This is not an extreme case.

Of course the percentage of cost is mainly influenced by the volume of business done, and it is here again that the system of regularly tabulating the results of each month's business is shown to be of such value; as should the cost of operating be 3½ per cent. on a turnover of one hundred thousand per month and the business of the firm should suddenly drop off to say seventy-five thousand dollars, the increase in the percentage of cost of doing business would be so marked that those in authority could not help noticing it and would be certain to take such measures as were possible to curtail expenses and so guard against an undue charge for running expenses.

A Western View Point.

In considering this cost of doing business you must remember that I am looking at it from a Westerner's view point, and it is possible that the items of expense which press so heavily upon those of us who are engaged in business on the Pacific Coast, are not so apparent in the East. I refer particularly to the enormous cost of having the country thoroughly patroled by our travelers. In British Columbia, where I reside, population is sparse and towns widely distant from each other; railways are few and far between, and it is frequently necessary to drive from one town to another; in fact, there are some parts of British Columbia which are covered by our travelers through which it is necessary to drive for days at a time, the charge for a team being in many cases $10 per day. Then the amount spent in railway fares as compared with the East is something enormous, distances are great, rates of transportation are high, and whilst a British Columbia traveler is spending twelve or fifteen hours in reaching a small town where he may perhaps succeed in securing one small order, his brother in the East has in the same time been able to make two or perhaps three towns, selling several customers in each town.

What the Term Covers.

What is the cost of doing business? To my mind this term covers all salaries, with the exception of those paid to travelers; rent, insurance, taxes, cartage. In fact, everything paid out in connection with the running of the business, with the exception of travelers' salaries, travelers' expense account and interest. I omit travelers' salaries as it is my custom to treat each traveler as a separate branch of the business, charging his salary against the profits made on the sales credited to his account, and I omit interest as I do not consider that this is a legitimate charge as part of the cost of operating. If it is found that there is not sufficient capital with which to run the business, and it becomes necessary to borrow, then this interest is what may be termed an extraordinary expenditure which must be taken account of independently of the regular charges, and should be a charge against the net profit shown after deducting running expenses. In this way it will be readily seen whether the result obtained warrants the borrowing of money or whether it would not perhaps be better to curtail operations and so avoid the necessity for seeking accommodation.

In computing the cost of doing business every item which enters into the make-up of a wholesale grocers' establishment must be taken account of, and if these items are carefully gone over and considered separately it will be surprising, to the man who is not in the habit of getting down to the details of his business, what a formidable array of charges there is to contend with and how with a little care and management some of them may be curtailed, whilst others may be done away with altogether.

Some Troublesome Items.

Just a few remarks as to some of the items which help to swell the cost of doing business:

Broken Packages—This is a fruitful source of increased cost and is a question which should receive the careful consideration of the trade. Formerly the request by a customer for less than a case lot was comparatively rare, but with the multiplication of retail establishments, and the vast increase in the number of articles of different brands which go to make up an average stock, as well as the fierceness of competition, it has now become almost the rule rather than the exception to sell less than a case, and in orders which are shipped to outside points the number of repacked cases is something astonishing. All these cases cost money and not only that, the labor and material for packing, excelsior, straw or whatever may be used, is no small item in the expense account, whereas in the vast majority of sales no provision is made in the way of an increased price for a less than case lot.

Advertising—It is so easy to give a page advertisement to a trade paper for a special edition, or go into some new idea in advertising, which from the solicitor's description looks most attractive, but does it pay a house which keeps its territory thoroughly covered by high-class and expensive salesmen to say to its customers through the medium of a paper just what their travelers are telling them from day to day by word of mouth.

Travelers' Expense Account—Here is another place where the cost of operating is often unduly increased, and it is an item which calls for serious thought and for vigorous action, both on the part of the merchant and the travelers.

The present condition of things, and here I would again remind you I am speaking from a Westerner's point of view, not knowing anything of conditions as they are in the East, seems to be a survival of the early pioneer habits when it was the custom to treat on every occasion no matter how trivial, and business of any kind was begun and ended with an invitation to "have something."

The custom of treating I am glad to say is rapidly dying out, but the tendency of the traveler to think that it is incumbent on him to spend something on his customer, and, so to speak, buy his trade, dies hard. How frequently do we find orders coming in with "a box of candy for Mrs. Brown; no charge," or "put in a box of cigars for Mr. Robinson, the buyer," small items in themselves, but when added up at the end of the year, a serious item in the expense account.

The Subscription Nuisance.

The subscription list is another thing which is a heavy drain on the wholesale grocer's expense account, the call for subscriptions to celebrations of one kind and another, agricultural fairs, grocers' picnics and what not being ever present. These are all very good and worthy objects in themselves, but has it never occurred to you that the custom of obtaining subscriptions from the wholesale trade for things of this nature is being rather overdone? Should not these fairs, celebrations, etc., be made more of a civic or provincial nature than is the case at present? The entertainment is for the good of the people at large, and it is not fair to saddle the business man with an overdue proportion of the expense involved. In considering this matter of subscription lists I say nothing whatever about donations to charitable objects, subscriptions to these being regarded by me in the light of a gift of a part of the profits which a man has already made, not as a charge against that which he is engaged in making, or hopes to make in future.

Room for Supervision.

In the matter of allowance for overcharges, goods short delivered, damage in transit, etc., there is ample room for the strictest possible supervision, as there is no doubt that if this department be not well kept in hand unscrupulous customers will take advantage of the situation and many items will be paid for by the wholesaler which really should be borne by the buyer.

In dealing with this subject you will note that I have carefully avoided any reference to the rate of gross profit which it is necessary for the house to earn in order to have something left over after paying its way, as I am engaged in considering only the expense of obtaining that profit.

Kenneth Mackenzie and Hugh Blain moved and seconded that Mr. Wollaston's paper be printed and distributed among travelers, as well as published in the minutes. There was an interesting half-hour's discussion of the paper participated in by Hugh Blain, Wm. Logan, Thos. Kinnear, H. G. Bauld, Albert Hebert, H. C. Beckett, W. C. Cross, L. A. Carrier, K. Mackenzie and Fred. T. Smye.

There was some discussion on the progress which has been made by the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States, in securing increased cash discounts from manufacturers, and the possibility of Canadian wholesalers proceeding along similar lines.

The meeting then adjourned for lunch.

The Afternoon Session.

W. C. Cross of Hall & Fairweather, St. John, opened the afternoon session by reading a splendid paper on "The Credit Man and His Work."

THE CREDIT MAN AND HIS WORK.

(By W. C. Cross, of Hall & Fairweather, Ltd., St. John, N.B.)

Credit has been defined as the name given to that business operation by which the delivery of money, merchandise or other consideration is made on the promise of future payment. Credit is based on confidence, confidence in a man's resources and in his ability to pay, in his character and integrity ; confidence in the stability of the locality in which he conducts his business, in the country itself ; confidence in the strength of its Government and the soundness of its finances. Tangible assets are the chief basis for the extension of credits, but the foundation stone on which the system of credit is built is character—thus a man having the elements most essential for success—honesty, ability, good habits, industry, economy and care in the conduct of his business, even though he be financially weak, is more worthy of credit than he who having large resources is of doubtful honesty ; in fact, in the great majority of cases if the credit man is absolutely sure of his customers' honesty and integrity many other considerations may safely be eliminated, at the same time the importance of a certain amount of capital in any business venture must not be underestimated.

Facts Regarding Failures.

The prodigality with which credit has been granted in the past to irresponsible persons who have had absolutely nothing to lose in case of failure is as serious a reflection on the foresight of the mercantile houses of the country who granted the credit as on the lack of honor on the part of the bankrupts whose very inefficiency was enhanced because they knew from the start there was nothing for them to lose in their business venture. The careless and indiscriminate manner that has characterized the granting of credit in the past is borne out by the following facts and figures, which I have been able to procure and tabulate by means of data furnished through the courtesy of the Bradstreet Company.

In the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, St. Pierre and Miquelon for the year 1907 there were reported 1,365 commercial failures, with liabilities $11,735,272. and assets $5,276,698, showing a nominal shrinkage of $6,458,574. It is true that conditions prevailing last year were very adverse owing to the financial crisis through which we passed, but the above figures are only slightly in excess of the average. For four years from 1904 to 1907 inclusive, the average failures per annum in Canada amounted to 1,302. The average liabilities were $11,271,094, and assets $5,075,846, showing a nominal shrinkage of $6,195,248. The figures quoted do not include failures of professional men, farmers, stock brokers and real estate dealers, but are confined to mercantile houses, banks and other strictly financial institutions. This enormous loss to the business men of the country is due to certain causes which may be grouped as follows :

A.—DUE TO FAULTS OF THOSE FAILING.

1. Lack of capital.
2. Incompetence.
3. Fraudulence.
4. Inexperience.
5. Neglect of business.
6. Speculation.
7. Unwise granting of credits.
8. Personal extravagance.

B.—NOT DUE TO FAULTS OF THOSE FAILING.

1. Specific conditions, (disaster, etc.)
2. Failure of others.
3. Competition.

In Canada during the past four years lack of capital and incompetence, both faults of those failing in business, were responsible for 71.1 per cent. of the number of failures, and 71.5 per cent. of the liabilities. Specific conditions, the third cause in order—one, however, beyond control of the individual, accounted for 9.7 per cent. of the number, and 7.7 per cent. of the liabilities—this cause is closely followed by fraud, through which 8.2 per cent. have failed since 1904 with 6.8 per cent. of liabilities chargeable to this same fault.

The Casual Percentage.

The causes assigned to the failures in Canada during 1904, 1905, 1906 and 1907 show the following average percentage, both as to number and to liability :

A.	No.		LIA.
1. Lack of capital ...	55.2		53.3
2. Incompetence	15.9		18.2
3. Fraud	8.2		6.8
4. Inexperience	3.4		5.1
5. Neglect	3.8		2.8
6. Speculation	.8		2.1
7. Unwise credits ..	.8		1.
8. Extravagance	.7	88.8	.4	89.7
B.
1. Specific conditions	9.7		7.7
2. Failure of others	1.		2.4
3. Competition	.5	11.2	.2	10.3
		100.		100.

Must Exercise More Care.

A mere casual perusal of the facts just presented reveals the necessity for more care than has apparently been exercised heretofore in granting credit—that the average loss in the Dominion through failures among mercantile and financial houses is over six million dollars annually demands a prompt and effective line of action to prevent, if possible, the squandering of so large a sum of money and the key to the situation is largely in the hands of the men who have the granting of credit at their disposal. It is true that certain chances must be taken, but it is equally true that when 55.3 per cent. of the failures in Canada result from lack of capital, and 53.3 per cent. of the cash lost through these failures is a result of the same cause, that sufficient care in the past has not been exercised in granting credit to persons with practically no financial responsibility. It is evident that too strong a desire for expansion has induced manufacturers and merchants to take long chances which have resulted in subsequent annoyance and loss.

The credit man's ideal is to fill a maximum number of orders with a minimum percentage of loss ; volume of sales comes through taking chances, as does losses, and he is fortunate indeed who knows where to draw the line so as to prevent his accounts from getting beyond the point of safety.

The Ideal Credit Man.

The ideal credit man should possess a variety of accomplishments. He should be a good scholar, an apt correspondent, a fair lawyer, a practiced accountant, a good collector, a man of sound judgment, quick to decide and possessing strong intuitive faculties. He should be a man of unremitting persistence, yet not unable to show sympathy under certain conditions. He must be tactful and polite, a man of civility gaining the friendship and confidence of his customers ; in short, he should seek to create the impression with each customer with whom he has to deal that his friendship and advice will produce a condition of things resulting in mutual benefit.

Debtor and creditor are dependent on each other more than either may very often realize and a hearty and frank co-operation is of great assistance in aiding both to success. Every business man takes a certain amount of pride and justly so, in the success of his customers, to help them while helping himself should be his aim. No better advertisement is possible than the knowledge that one's success has contributed to the success of one's customers.

The credit man's work should be constructive, not destructive. He ought always to maintain the appearance of a calm and equable temperament; for a credit man to become excited would be as incongruous as for a judge on the bench to display passion or temper.

Fair treatment, wisely and cheerfully administered, will create a loyalty on the part of the customers and build up a business; even when necessary to turn a man down it can be done in a tactful way that will arouse no spirit of antagonism.

A Reasonable Credit Policy.

The great majority to whom we sell have for their principal capital only experience and energy and more or less ability. Their success is contingent upon times and circumstances which they cannot altogether control and with this class the credit man's work should prove most efficient; a wisely administered policy sufficiently liberal in its credit-making will result in the healthy growth and the popularity of a house. To be popular is next to being successful—in fact, the most successful houses are the most popular in very many cases. But a liberal policy in credits need not be an easy-going policy; credit should be given readily, but with due discrimination. Once, however, an account matures, prompt settlement should be expected and effected. To collect a bill that is past due without giving any offence and to retain the good-will of the delinquent is a problem every credit man is called upon to solve. The man whose feelings have been hurt through some injudicious letter or remark may possibly come back, but in the majority of cases the account is lost and the antagonism that follows may have a far more lasting effect than might be thought possible. A man who feels that he has been treated unjustly in many cases will go out of his way to get square and put all the obstacles he can in the path of the firm who has shown so little tact as to incur his ill will.

When the debtor asks a favor such as the renewal of a note or the extension of time on a bill of goods it becomes his duty to satisfy his creditor on the score of his responsibility and solvency. If he breaks faith it may cause action that would precipitate his ruin. A heart-to-heart talk may help both debtor and creditor in solving the difficulty and in planning for the future successful issue of their business relations.

How to Treat Slow Pays.

If due care in granting credit is exercised the bills that have not matured will give the credit man little concern and involve no loss of sleep. It is the past due accounts that make heavy demands on his nervous system. Past due accounts include the careless, the chronically-slow, the temporarily-hard-up and the insolvent debtors, and in dealing with these the credit man's tact and good judgment find scope for almost unlimited development. Because an account is not paid promptly when due does not signify that the debtor is no longer to be trusted, carelessness is very aggravating, but the fault is not incurable by any means. The slow-paying customer is practically in the same class as the careless one, yet both may become a source of income to any house if carefully watched and followed up by the credit man. Harsh treatment is the worst possible thing to give a customer who through various causes may have become hard-up. A special study of his case may reveal extenuating circumstances and call forth a little forbearance and leniency which may prevent a crash and develop a satisfactory and loyal account, and a kindness of this sort is not always forgotten.

In all failures except fraudulent ones it always happens that payments are made long after the debtor's insolvency, who, being ignorant of his real condition, continues to satisfy his claimants as long as he can, with the hope that he may pull through. The vigilance of the credit man who learns of such a case will enable him to reduce his claim to a minimum before suspension of payment takes place. Probably the most annoying problem the credit man has to face at the present time is the despicable habit of so many retail dealers in returning drafts with no word of explanation or some flimsy reason that bears the lie on its face. The time has come for some concerted action to abolish this evil and his name will be handed down to posterity as a public benefactor who can effect its cure.

A Black List Necessary.

He who habitually neglects to pay any attention to a draft or who allows acceptances and notes to be dishonored without any request for renewal or extension or other arrangement ought to be put on a black list and kept there until he sees the error of his ways and gives good evidence of his intention to provide for his bills at maturity. When money is due it belongs to the house and not to the customer and any extension of time should be held by the patron as well as by the house, to be a special dispensation granted as a favor and not by obligation.

To sum up—the credit man is a necessity because of competition and over-anxiety to sell goods on the part of the creditor and lack of capital, incompetence, fraud and other faults we have noted on the part of the debtor. His qualifications, briefly stated, are a knowledge of commercial law, vigilance, promptness, good judgment, common sense and tact. His work is to get every dollar due his house by holding all good customers firmly in line, by coaxing and prodding the laggards to step with the prompt ones and by keeping the worthless ones out of the ranks altogether.

This paper gave rise to a great deal of talk on terms, drafts and other matters treated of in the address. L. E. Geoffrion thought that if short terms were adopted there would be no use for the services of the credit man. W. G. Craig was impressed with the importance of the returned draft question with which every jobber had to contend. One can often sympathize with the man who returns a draft, knowing he may be hard up at times, or in peculiar circumstances, but it does not do for the retailer to return drafts time after time, with no explanation, as is often the case.

Messrs. Blain, Mackenzie, Carrier, Smye, Hebert, Logan and Humphreys also discussed the question raised in the address. It was decided that this paper also should be printed and distributed.

This did not settle the subject, however, for there was much more discussion. It was stated that many people went into business with little or no capital, to the detriment of those retailers who had capital and experience, to the injury of the latter class, for, not knowing anything about the business, and having no money, they almost invariably made a mess of things.

Fred Smye suggested the establishment of a clearing house, such as there is at present in Winnipeg. This was of great assistance. Mr. Wollaston said there had been one in British Columbia a few years ago, but it was not successful.

In the matter of returned drafts it was thought that the banks were responsible in many instances.

Great interest was displayed in the discussion on terms. It was shown that in Quebec terms were uniform, and everybody was quite satisfied, but in the other provinces conditions were not quite so good.

J. A. Beaudry, treasurer of the Retail Merchants Association read a pleasing paper on "The Relations Between the Manufacturer, Wholesaler, Retailer and Consumer," which was listened to with attention.

PAPER BY J. A. BEAUDRY.

The Relations Between the Manufacturer, Wholesaler, Retailer and Consumer.

By appearing before you I fully realize the difficulty of my mission, and I hope that the remarks that I have to make will be received in good part, as, in no way, I wish to make any personal insinuation or statement. I wish to deal with this subject from the broadest possible standpoint, having only in view the improvement of our conditions and the comfort and welfare of the public at large.

You have met with the object of uplifting the standard of morality as applied to the distribution of goods, and I sincerely congratulate you upon it. Through the want of proper trade legislation, the lack of practical organization on the part of business men, the deficiency of commercial relations between the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer, trade conditions have drifted into a chaos, so that it is nearly impossible for any man to offer suggestions that would relieve the situation. Various arguments can be offered either in favor of or against the present system, according to individual, selfish standpoint. The public, the consumer, is interested in one thing only, and that is to buy his requirements at the lowest possible cost. He does not in any way realize or appreciate the services which are rendered to him by the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer. Generally, he views with dissatisfaction, and sometimes with suspicion, the different trade organizations. His impression seems to be that such bodies are being formed only with selfish motives, and with the object of increasing the prices of his requirements. We must admit that nothing has yet been done to change his opinion on the matter. The manufacturer and the wholesaler, not being in contact with the consumer, make it practically impossible for the former to educate the latter on this point, and, unfortunately, the retailer, who could discharge this duty, is at first inclined to share the opinion of the public, as his education on this point has also been somewhat neglected. Through the only information available to the public, it seems at first that the manufacturers are being organized with the object of protecting themselves from the wholesaler, to prevent him from intruding into the manufacturing business, and also to pet that troublesome child—the tariff; that the wholesalers are being organized to protect themselves from the manufacturer, and to prevent the retailer from getting his supply direct from the manufacturer; that the retailers are being organized with the only object of preventing the wholesaler from intruding into his domain by selling directly to the consumer. Such are generally the contentions of the consumer—and has there been any practical attempt made to change that opinion? If not, are we not by that fact accepting that opinion as being accurate? Further, if we realize the difficulties that have beset the grocery trade, either wholesale or retail, should we not question and try to ascertain if every one engaged in it is doing his duty and all his duty? Are the members individually strictly following the decisions of the association, and is there not the source of a great many difficulties? This point will be taken up later.

The Mission of the Classes.

The public has a general notion that there should be in existence a manufacturer, a wholesaler and a retailer, but very few realize their mission or their usefulness.

Man's tastes and needs have evolved and kept pace with the march of civilization. Science under its various forms, invention and new industries following, made the conditions such that vegetation and material in its natural form were no more sufficient for the requirements of man. Then was organized the process of manufacturing, which has developed to its present excellence. No one ever denied the usefulness or the actual necessity of the manufacturer; no one ever denied the impossibility or impracticability of every individual manufacturing for his personal use. On the contrary, the faculty of man is so arranged that to become an expert, he has to concentrate all his brain and energy upon one subject and make a specialty of it. Therefore if he enters the manufacturing field, he must do nothing else and endeavor to manufacture one article for as many people as he can reach. Then the problem of distribution was originated. Was it practical and economical for the manufacturer to sell directly to the consumer who needs daily but a very small supply? Certainly not. Was it practical and economical for a manufacturer to sell his goods directly to the retail dealer, which means thousands of small distributions every day? Certainly not. But the system of selling to the wholesaler who buys large quantities from different manufacturers, saving on transportation and handling, and who assort these different kinds and qualities of goods and reship them so assorted in quantities required by the retailer is of great service. The same argument will apply in the case of the retailer. The retail stores are the public warehouses placed in locations most conveniently situated for the benefit of the public. The retail stores are conducted mostly by men who have lived for years in the one locality and who have devoted their life to their business, and whose knowledge is the only safeguard of the public. Their profits are small, as is evidenced by the fact that very few ever retired except with the aid of the bailiff or by death. The wholesaler and the retailer are surely not remunerated according to the value of the services which they render to the consumers, therefore, I claim that the present system—the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer—is the natural channel of trade. I claim that this system has never been established for the benefit of any one class or individual or with any selfish motive, but that it is the natural result of practical experience in commercial economy.

Some Grievances.

Having established the laws which govern the present system of distribution I will endeavor to show the cause of grievances that the manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers have to contend with.

If the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer would make it a point to remain each in his field of operations, as prescribed by the natural laws of trade and commerce, they would all reap the reward attached to their obedience to that law, and each would conduct his business with satisfaction and gratification, but as the opposite is in harmony with the facts which are taking place daily, we execute upon ourselves the punishment attached to our disobedience, and we have to contend with all the difficulties and grievances of which we are complaining.

It is a recognized fact that the manufacturer is not always in a position to know the services which are being rendered to him by the wholesaler. While he may be very competent in his business, he may not be well posted on the cost of distribution and the value of the work which is being done for him by the wholesaler.

On the other hand, we also see the wholesaler intruding into the domain of the retailer by trying to secure the accounts of all consumers of any importance. This action forces the retailer to retaliate under the form of trying to obtain his supply from the source of production so as to be in a position to meet the unfair competition of the wholesaler, and while this performance is going on, the consumer is laid under the impression that he has been taken advantage of, and is trying to devise some new systems by which the middleman may be eliminated. And this fact is evidenced by the efforts which have been put forward in favor of the Co-operative Bill which is now before the Senate.

A Remedy Suggested.

Now that the relations between the manufacturer, the wholesaler, the retailer and the consumer have not been carried on according to the natural laws of trade and commerce that each party is suffering from the course of action adopted by the other parties interested, we are every day inflicting upon ourselves the punishment attached to disobedience of that commercial law. The question is, "What can we do to overcome the present difficulties." The only remedy I can offer to the present situation is, "Let us determine each one our field of operation; let us concentrate our efforts and endeavors to wipe out of the statute books of the land the classes which brand our concerted actions in trade as criminal offence; let our different organizations produce their best results in spreading business education amongst the public, amongst our members, and principally amongst our politicians; let us give the best there is in us to promulgate and perpetuate the principles of loyalty; let us urge our members to be loyal to their organization and support it morally and financially."

W. H. Seyler, business manager of The Canadian Grocer, addressed the meeting on the good work being done by that paper for the trade in general.

D. Marshall, M.P., who happened to be present also said a few words. This concluded the business for the first day.

The Second Day's Programme.

Business was rapidly being cleared up. The matter of giving Christmas boxes was mentioned, but this is a question which is left to each province to deal with. Since the dropping of the custom, however, there has been great satisfaction on the whole, on the part of both the wholesaler and the retailer.

It was decided to print the minutes of the meeting on similar paper and same form to that used by the Ontario Guild.

President Beckett read an appropriate address on "The Importance and Value of Trade Associations and Their Relations with the Government," which is reproduced herewith:

VALUE OF TRADE ASSOCIATIONS.

By H. C. Beckett, Retiring President, of W. H. Gillard & Co., Hamilton.

In submitting for your consideration and discussion a subject of vital interest, viz., "The importance and value of trade associations and their relations with the Government," it is with the firm conviction and a feeling of confidence that the time is coming when the difficulties under which the trade and commerce of this country have labored in the past, will be largely minimized by progressive, intelligent measures so much needed in view of the changed conditions of trade.

In dealing with a matter so important any might we not profitably consider the reasons for our many difficulties?

Briefly then, trade associations, their value and importance as a factor in promoting and bettering trade conditions have not been thoroughly understood or appreciated by the average merchant, the press, the public generally, and particularly by our Federal and Provincial Governments.

Associations Not Understood.

Trade associations have been misrepresented, have been regarded with suspicion, have been looked upon as combinations pure and simple. It has not been fully realized, and is not yet fully realized, that trade associations are absolutely necessary to promote healthy and honorable trade conditions. Without them how can we successfully wrestle with the complex problems that confront every business man and every business community? If there are evils in business, united effort is the only practical remedy. Individual effort is barely noticed. Organized effort means power and will be noticed sooner or later.

When a great many concerns or units are engaged in the manufacture and sale of goods of similar character, order, system, and recognized business customs are necessary to prevent confusion and disaster. The reasonable, sensible, businesslike and only practical way to deal with all problems that confront and endanger any line of trade is through an association.

The Keynote of Progress.

The keynote of progress is clearly and unmistakably organization and unity of effort, and the things so far accomplished by trade associations, in spite of hasty and narrow-gauged opposition, are too pronounced to be doubted.

Take our own business, to those who will study the grocery trade on broad lines, and remember what has been accomplished in the past. You must admit that it would be fatal to halt in the march of advance. No matter how imperfect we appear in each other's eyes it must be clear to you that the work should progress until we reach that state when retailer, wholesaler and manufacturer will realize the benefits of co-operation on lines of mutual fair dealing. It should not be assumed that these three interests are antagonistic, but it should be our constant effort to work out lines along which the three classes can harmonize.

If education is necessary for the young, is it not equally necessary in business? Have we not dishonesty to contend with in business? Should dishonest travelers and dishonest merchants be permitted to pursue their nefarious and demoralizing methods unchecked and unhindered? What will the next generation of business men be like? Things have come to a pretty pass when honest men, and men with honest inclinations, are to be discouraged in any efforts they may make to put the merchandizing and manufacturing of goods on a higher scale than has existed recently.

That progress in association work has been slow is largely due to blind self interest, prejudice, suspicion and jealousy of a competitor. It has perhaps not occurred to all that a remedy for the evils which exist in business should, and must, sooner or later, be exercised in accordance with honest, sound principles, and under Government regulation.

Some Peculiar Ideas.

Sometimes we find people in business with peculiar ideas. They imagine they can continue selling goods that cost them 107 for 105, and still pay their creditors. Such people are a menace to the trade, as they are damaging to the manufacturers, and their license to do harm is not in the interests of healthy trade conditions. To such we should turn our attention and be able by reasonable methods to prevent the spread of this disease.

To anyone familiar with present day conditions it seems incomprehensible that there are men in business who belittle and underestimate the value and importance of trade associations. But there are such people, and to them can, in a great measure, be attributed present day evils. They are mean enough to take advantage of what others have done for their benefit, but, either through fear or meanness of heart, will take no part in the work themselves.

There must be some recognized, legally-sanctioned security in business to prevent serious conditions with respect to the investment of capital. Failure in legitimate business is not desirable, and any effort to bring about a better condition than at present exists among merchants and manufacturers should be encouraged and intelligently investigated.

The Government's Antagonistic Attitude.

Now what has been the attitude of both our Federal and Provincial Governments in respect to trade associations? In a word—antagonistic. And why this antagonism? A prominent Canadian banker quite recently gave a reason which I am firmly convinced is true, viz., an irresponsible press. If a country is honeycombed with agitators who are opposed to capital and to corporations or associations generally, why do politicians and cabinet ministers listen to and heed the false ans erroneous statements which so frequently appear in an irresponsible press and stand ready to shape their course by what they foolishly imagine to be a popular cry? The answer is easy—it is a question of votes. Thousands of dollars are spent annually to maintain a labor bureau, to catch the labor vote, and it is to the credit of the labor unions that they have succeeded in impressing the Governments with their numerical importance, even if they are in the minority. Will the long-suffering merchants and manufacturers of the Dominion have to show their power at the ballot to get a proper recognition at the hands of indifferent cabinet ministers?

It is deplorable that more thought and attention is not given by those who are placed in authority, to find out the actual commercial needs of our country. Those who would give careful attention would see signs of the times which ought to be heeded. That evolution is in progress in the conditions of trade cannot be denied by any thoughtful and intelligent representatives of the people. The wonder is that the necessity for safeguarding the commercial interests of Canada is treated so lightly and indifferently, and that practically the only attention given to trade associations is to regard them as a menace to the commercial prosperity of our country, rather than a medium for good and all that stands for honor in business.

Should Look to Business Men.

It is to business men as a whole, those who are engaged in the great service of carrying on the operations of trade throughout the length of this great Dominion, that a government should look for opinion and advice to bear upon legislation affecting business interests which are interlaced with the interests of all. Let the voice of business men be heard and a wise government will adopt progressive measures.

Agitation is an aid to redress and the more the importance of trade associations is discussed, the more thought will be applied to them, the more attention will be given to them, so that ultimately trade opinion will evolve a plan that will minimize, if it does not completely cure, the unsatisfactory conditions which at present prevail.

Should Protect Legitimate Business.

In the interests of good government there should reside somewhere the power to protect the legitimate merchants and manufacturers of the country against waste and wrong. Such power should reside with the government if trade associations cannot be trusted to stop at the proper limit. Personal interest may not yet have acquired the necessary intelligence and sensitiveness to stop at the point where it begins to invade people's rights, and as good government should protect the people's rights, trade associations should be recognized. Although suggestions were made to the Ottawa authorities months ago, and promises made that enquiry would be instituted with a view to progressive measures, nothing has been done. It has already been suggested that the trade and commerce department should wake up and enquire into the commercial needs of our country; it has been suggested that a Bureau of Internal Trade and Commerce be established with power to pass upon agreements between merchants and manufacturers, and to perform such other work as would safeguard the interests of the people. Our neighbors across the line have received the promise of their president that something must be done to prevent the senseless and vindictive attacks upon necessary business methods. Why should the trade of our fair country be persecuted and intimidated? Is there any sensible reason that can be given for it? The importance of the matter requires immediate attention. Promises so long delayed look like insincerity. It is not a position to inspire confidence. Can merchants and manufacturers expect anything for the future? Let us hope so.

It should be the law of the land that no legislation be enacted, affecting the trade of the country, without first getting the opinion of trade associations through such associations' accredited representatives. No man with a fad should be allowed to quietly get the ear of parliament and then railroad through some legislation hurtful to the interests of sound business, as has been done in the past. The things our legislature do to hurt business frequently indicate a complete lack of knowledge and grasp of the subject dealt with. What may have taken years to build up is destroyed in a night. At present there is no government method to safeguard the business man, and it is necessary and desirable that there should be.

Suggestions Regarding Methods.

In the first place, a complete and accurate record of the names and the officers of every trade association should be on file with the Department of Trade and Commerce. This record would be of benefit in enabling the governments to get in touch with the trade of this country. The trade should be consulted. The governments should get at what would be best for the general good, based on sound business. They should consult business associations, not individuals, on questions concerning the business welfare of this country. No bill should be allowed to pass its second reading without first sending a copy of it to the accredited representatives of every trade association in Canada. Under the present system no provision is made to keep the trade informed of what is going on. It is only after it is too late that the trade discovers some new regulation seriously damaging business without being of any benefit to the consumer. Thousands of dollars are spent annually in huge deputations to Ottawa protesting against unfair legislation. The business men of this country are put to enormous expense when this might be avoided if reasonable and businesslike methods and regulations were adopted.

I would suggest that steps be taken by this Guild to bring the attention of parliament to the present unsatisfactory and out-of-date methods with a view to the adoption of progressive measures so much needed under the changed business conditions.

The prejudice against associations must gradually but surely disappear. We must join in a cry for higher standards of ethics in the conduct of business. The change will not only be beneficial to the business men of to-day, but will have a good and necessary influence on the thought and conduct of the young generation soon to share the commercial future of our nation.

A Change of Name.

An important move was made when it was suggested that the name of the association be changed. Many names were suggested, and finally it was moved by Percy Wollaston seconded by Robert Murray, New Glasgow, that the body in future be known as the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange.

Albert Hebert suggested similar changes be made in the name of the local guilds, but this is a matter for them to decide individually.

The nominating committee, which was appointed the previous afternoon, and which consisted of Chairman Sloan and Messrs. Cross, Carrier and Beckett, now announced the result of their meeting held the evening before.

The Newly-Elected Officers.

The new officers, all elected by acclamation, are: President, L. E. Geoffrion, Montreal; vice-presidents, for Quebec, L. A. Carrier, M.P.. for Ontario; Hugh Blain, Toronto; for Manitoba, Kenneth Mackenzie, Winnipeg; for Alberta, E. H. Telfer, Calgary; for British Columbia, Percy Wollaston, Victoria; for Nova Scotia, H. G. Bauld, Halifax; for New Brunswick, W. C. Cross, St. John; for Prince Edward Island, W. H. Atkin Charlottetown.

When it came to deciding upon the place where the annual meeting would be held next year Percy Wollaston was up like a shot proposing Victoria. He was seconded by Mr. Mackenzie, who later was anxious that the decision should be in favor of Winnipeg. There was much discussion, and several centres were mentioned, but the choice finally fell to Victoria, with Winnipeg as an alternative.

Just before the adjournment of the meeting President Geoffrion stated that by a regrettable oversight Colonel MacLean, publisher and proprietor of The Canadian Grocer, had not been invited to attend the meeting. He suggested that a resolution be passed expressing their regret that such an oversight had occurred, since the gentleman in question had always been one of the warmest friends of the grocery trade and its interests. This was done.

This concluded the business proceedings.

Luncheon at Kent House.

The members were promptly escorted to a special car and conveyed to Montmorency Falls, seven miles away, where they were entertained at luncheon by the members of the Quebec City Guild.

President Carrier of the local guild, presided, with Madame Carrier in the vice-chair.

Afterwards the visitors were shown around the beautiful grounds, around historic Kent House and a few pleasant hours were passed, after which they returned to the city.

HEARD ON 'CHANGE.

Members of the Exchange found it frequently necessary to descend to the basement of the Chateau to get their shoes shined.

Those Quebec wholesalers are princely entertainers.

It was a great idea to have the ladies present at the luncheon. As President Carrier of the Quebec City Exchange remarked, "They will keep us in the straight and narrow path."

A dollar apiece was easy money on the boat going down. Only three got caught; but Harry Beckett was one of them. To the rest that was worth five dollars

The sugar plantations of the south were well represented going down.

Puzzle: What was the dark object in the smoking room on the "Montreal"? Do not all answer at once.

H. G. Bauld, the man from Halifax, was responsible for the luncheon table being stripped of its pretty floral decorations. He wanted a buttoniere—and got it, but so did everybody else.

A. P. Murray: "The wholesalers are pretty bad, but not quite so black as they are painted."

Percy Wollaston and Kenneth Mackenzie are a credit to the west. They wanted the convention in their country next year and won their point.

Which will it be—Victoria or Winnipeg?

C. C. What does that stand for?

Roses at a dollar apiece are expensive at this time of year, but they sold well.

The person who first guesses what C. C. stands for will be awarded a prize by the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange.

$4,00?

The only "falls" were at Montmorency.

President Beckett suggested that the association be called the Merry Widow Outfit.

Percy Wollaston, accompanied by Mrs. Wollaston, sailed for England on Friday. First holiday in 33 years.

When H. G. Bauld, Halifax, was asked if he was the objector to some measure before the meeting, he promptly replied: "No, I am the p-r-o-jector."

"Let us make progress," was Ex-President Beckett's slogan, and it is a good one.

Senator Turner, of Whitehead & Turner, Quebec, graced the meeting with his presence Thursday norning. In a little address he made he said that while he was a senator, they had not succeeded in "shelving" him yet.

The motion of thanks tendered the Quebec Wholesale Grocers' Guild was: "Resolved—That the thanks of the visiting representatives be, and are hereby, tendered to the Quebec Wholesale Grocers' Exchange for the complete and satisfactory arrangements made for the holding of the annual meeting of this Exchange, and for the hospitality so kindly extended to them by the Quebec Exchange."

Senator Turner paid a pleasing tribute to the late C. P. Hebert, who had always been a prominent figure at their conventions and took great interest in Guild matters.

L. A. Carrier just returned from England in time for the convention.

The Brantford contingent, Messrs. Oliver and Truesdale, like true friends, were here, there and everywhere together.

In Montreal, John Anderson, of Chase & Sanborn, honored Messrs. Olive and Truesdale and The Grocer representative with a drive around the city. The Senator was unfortunately attending to his parliamentary duties at Ottawa.

What a perfect vice-chairman Mrs. L. A. Carrier made. That end of the table was a particularly happy one.

Arch. Miller was na' swinging the besom, but he war a gran' man an' a beesy ain a' the same. It's no only at the roarin' game that Archie stands oot, he's a gran' man whare'er ye put him.

Fred. Smye, he of Hamilton fame, took an active part in the deliberations. His knowledge and experience of the trade is a valuable asset to the Exchange.

Sam Vila and The Grocer representative lost "one of the best times of their lives." Never mind. We'll get square in Victoria or Winnipeg.

A. P. Murray, sales manager Edwards-Starch Co., met a lot of old friends and made a host of new ones.

Mr. Wollaston's heretical remarks re advertising are charitably overlooked. A first-class grocer and a good business man and a thorough gentleman, we fear his education along publicity lines has been sadly neglected. Look out for circulars and pamphlets, friend Wollaston.

Kenneth Mackenzie, Winnipeg, is a familiar and welcome personality at the meetings of the Exchange. We'll meet in Winnipeg (or Victoria) next year.

London, Ont., was represented by A. McPherson, of Elliott, Marr & Co.

The Kingston trade was well represented by President W. G. Craig, of the Ontario W. G. Guild; R. J. Carson and M. S. Sutherland, of Fenwick, Hendry & Co.

Albert Hebert, of Hudon, Hebert & Co., Montreal brought his business experience and quick decisions to bear on several important matters.

The kindly reference of Senator Turner to the late C. P. Hebert was a thoughtful act of courtesy to the memory of a good man and a true friend to the Exchange.

The Quebec (city) representatives were most attentive to their visitors. Messrs. Bazin, of Naz. Turcotte & Cie; J. B. E. Letellier and Arch. Miller all doing nobly to make everyone at home.

The trip to Montmorency Falls and the historic Duke of Kent's house was a fine idea on the part of the Quebec entertainment committee, and the journey thoroughly enjoyed by all. Mr. Carrier's little sketch of the famous hostlery at the luncheon was instructive and timely.

J. A. Beaudry's genial countenance and friendliness were rays of sunshine and encouragement. His interesting address was much appreciated.

Pres.-Elect L. E. Geoffrion's experience in grocery matters and as a harbor commissioner of Montreal, should make him a good presiding officier. His remarks were most loyal on the adoption of the word Canada in the new title of the association.

Jos. Ethier, president Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Guild and managing director of Laporte, Martin & Cie, was a popular figure at the convention, and a close participant in the deliberations.

Toronto's contingent, H. Blain, Major John Sloan, F. W. Humphrey, T. Kinnear and Wm. Logan were a powerful debating force and all took an active and effective interest in the work of the convention.

Arthur Desroches, of Lalonde & Desroches, Montreal, made many friends by his cheerful disposition and attention to discussions. A good companion and a worker.

The Maritime Province delegates were right in line with their good ideas and suggestions and showed them in many respects ahead of their western confreres.

Sam Screaton, jr., of the "Home-made Flavor," was a genial and welcome guest, and got into line with nearly every one present.

Secretary J. Stanley Cook is thoroughly posted and has everything at his fingers' ends. He's the right man in the right place, and will prove a valuable assistant to the new president.

T. Kinnear is always looked to for important suggestions and many of his opinions have been acknowledged invaluable.

One of the most genial and popular delegates was James Gow, of Macpherson, Glassco & Co., Hamilton.

Wonder what Messrs. Beckett and Innes wanted in Mr. Gow's stateroom?

Socially Mr. Gow stood out unique in that he kept Messrs. Beckett and Innes guessing as to the correct procedure in advancing and locating one's stateroom.

Mr. Beaudry made an efficient guide and treasurer for the party endeavoring to locate the plains of Abraham. The sunrise view from the Citadel is always an inspiring one. We know, for we have seen and learned.

A. P. Murray on behalf of the Canada Starch Co., representing the Edwardsburgh Starch Co. and the Brantford Starch Co., accompanied the members from Montreal to Quebec.

"It is pleasant to dwell together in unity."—Notice R. J. Carson and M. S. Sutherland, of Kingston, and A. G. Olive and O. E. Truesdale, of Brantford, happy and inseparable.

The last The Grocer representative saw of Messrs. Carson and Sutherland was in Montreal. They were admiring the four colossal statues on the new Royal Bank of Canada Building on St. James St.

LARGE LOBSTER PACK IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Season Promises to be the Best for Years.

The lobster fishing in Nova Scotia this season promises to be the best for years, says a Halifax correspondent. All along the shore from Halifax to Digby the fishing was never better. Notwithstanding the bad weather at times and the scarcity of bait at some places, the catches of lobsters have been very large. From Halifax to Canso the fishing has not been quite so good as in former years, but it is expected to improve before the close of the season.

The total pack for the season will be very large, some of the canneries already having hundreds of cases more packed than they did at the same time last year. Two weeks still remain before the close of the season. One factory on the western shore has packed two thousand cases to date.

Some of the exporters of live lobsters lost heavily in the recent slump in Boston, but the market is now much improved.

TORONTO'S FINE FACTORIES.

English Visitor Speaks Highly of City's Appearance.

A visitor from England, Arthur Spurgeon, managing-director of Cassel & Co., of London, Eng., who was in Toronto last week, spoke most enthusiastically of the fine impression made by the city's industrial establishments. "The factories in Toronto," said Mr. Spurgeon, "in nowise ever suggest that it is a manufacturing centre. I was here fifteen years ago," he continued, "and I see many progressive changes. There are, for instance, your big factories such as Massey-Harris, E. W. Gillette Co., Limited, and others, which are really handsome and palatial in appearance. Elsewhere factories are dingy, ugly buildings and one can easily tell whether a town is a manufacturing city or not.

Mr. Spurgeon was continually saying nice things about Toronto and was full of enthusiasm for Canada and Canadians.

MUST PAY GROCERY BILL.

Judgment was handed out on Friday by Justice Latchford in favor of Medland Bros., wholesale grocers, Toronto, against Wills & Co., H. B. Wills and R. E. Kemerer, for $7,238.78 for a bill of groceries. The facts of the case are that the last named member of the firm, R. E. Kemerer, posed as a broker, buying the goods for a railway contractor on the T. & N.O. Railway at McDougall's Chutes. The goods were furnished him on agreement of the company with which he was connected to pay the account. This was never done, and action was taken, resulting as above.

HOW A STOCK ORDER WAS SCOOPED.

Here is a true story which illustrates the value of "doing it now." The facts related, according to System, can be verified absolutely; the name of the town is a substitute name. The main events happened in Chicago.

At 10.30 o'clock, Wednesday morning, March 13, 1907, the sales manager of a Chicago wholesale grocery house received a tip from a friend in Wheaton that a stock order was to be had by quick action at that place.

The nearest salesman of the house was twenty miles away. At 10.45 o'clock a telegram was on the way to him, instructing him to go to Wheaton and get the stock order.

At 1.30 p.m. of the same day the salesman had his chief on the telephone, had given him the preliminary stock order for the opening day, with the assurance of completing the entire order on Friday. At 2.45 p.m. of that day the merchant's rating had been passed by the credit department, the goods packed and shipped, and on the following morning, when the salesman of the competing house arrived on the scene, the goods were in the store and clerks were arranging them.

Without system, co-operation and instant action such a record could not have been made. The transaction involved all the principal machinery of a house which does a business of several million a year, yet not a cog slipped.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Reading notices under this heading will be accepted at 10 cents per agate line.

Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, are expecting their third shipment of "Choice" and "Fancy" Barbadoes molasses, and are now booking orders for this lot. They are also securing a large share of the canned goods business, since the new prices, (25 to 30 per cent. lower than last year) have been out. They guarantee buyers against a decline if orders are placed before July 1. They report good sales of their "Soleil" brand canned goods.

Jos. Cote, wholesale tobacconist, Quebec, makes a generous offer to all trade visitors, who may come to the city for the Tercentary Celebrations. Being anxious that one and all should visit his establishment, he offers to transmit without charge the parcels which visitors purchase here and there throughout the city to their respective home addresses. Of course, Mr. Cote hopes and expects that the visitors will make some purchases from him as well, so that he may be able to enclose the parcels in a shipment of his goods.

ASSOCIATION NEEDS REORGANIZATION.

The report of the proceedings at the annual convention of the Ontario Retail Merchants' Association at Galt last week makes interesting reading and gives much food for thought.

One important point that is brought prominently before the reader is the seeming lack of appreciation of merchants generally, and members of the association particularly, of the work that has been accomplished for them by this organization. Here is an association of merchants united for mutual protection and for the advancement of the retailer generally, and yet out of the five thousand odd members, but seventeen hundred have this year paid the small annual fee imposed.

Surely all members recognize the fact that the Retail Merchants' Association has during the time of its existence done splendid work for the retail trade. Take the matter of legislation alone, is there one merchant in the whole country who has not been well repaid for the small annual fee he is asked to pay? A moment's consideration will bring but one answer.

One good thing will come of the very free discussion which took place on the financial position of the association, and that is the re-organization of the association that is bound to come. The members of the association long ago should have taken the interest they now manifest in the affairs of the organization. Is it not too much to expect two men to carry along unaided the work of an organization which represents perhaps the greatest body of workers in the country? Besides placing the association on a sound financial basis, it should be the aim and duty of the special committee appointed to look into the affairs at the head office to devise a scheme for carrying on the work in a businesslike way, for the association cannot be regarded as other than an organization of business men, which must be conducted on sound business principles.

EVIDENCE OF IMPROVING CONDITIONS.

"I am pleased to tell you that business is improving very nicely with us, and with a magnificient crop in sight such as the country shows at the present time, business cannot help but improve, and if the crop is harvested in good shape we can look for 1909 to be one of the best years Canada has ever seen."

The above is from a letter received by a friend in Toronto from a former president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the head of one of the big paint and varnish concerns. It is the best evidence of improving business conditions. Paints and varnishes are to some extent luxuries. A business man, a farmer or mechanic, does not paint and touch up his buildings or his fences when times are bad, money scarce and the outlook blue. It is a sign of returning prosperity. Advantage should be taken of it by business men to collect their accounts promptly in order to pay the wholesale merchant and he to pay the manufacturer. The manufacturer has need of the money for extensions of his plant and purchase of machinery. With manufacturers busy, more mechanics will obtain employment and the money will pour back into the hands of the merchants.

PLAN FOR A HOLIDAY.

The businessman who sticks to regular duties all through the year without taking the relaxation of a holiday makes a serious mistake. Everyone engaged in active business should plan for some sort of a change or an outing sometime during the year, and the summer, when business in most departments of trade naturally slackens up a little, seems the best time to have it.

Some men get most benefit from a complete change of scene and conditions and want to get out into the woods and on the water. Others travel to other towns, look over businesses similar to their own and pick up new ideas.

While both of these ideas are good ones, the former is much the more valuable from the fact that it provides relaxation from business worry and the constant planning that is part of every well-organized business. Though such a holiday looks at first like a waste of time and money it will pay handsome returns in the end, for in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, and particularly if such an outing is planned with a view to escaping usual conditions, the returns from improved mental and physical condition will more than make up for any financial loss, and the business man will return with a new zest and new capabilities for business. No matter what seems to be in the way plan to take a holiday during the present summer.

CANADA AGAIN TO THE FORE.

New York shipping interests have awakened to the fact that Montreal is cutting into their grain freighting business seriously.

Various arguments are advanced regarding this condition of affairs. The chief one seems to be that the lake freighting companies are cutting prices so that the grain is being diverted toward Montreal. This may be so, but those advancing this reason omit to state that Montreal has natural advantages over New York, and some other American ports, which is also a large factor in the present situation. The freight rates from Buffalo to New York have risen in the last five or six years from 2½c to 5½c, which latter rate is almost prohibitive.

From Duluth to New York the rate on grain is 7 4-10c delivered free on board the boat. From Duluth to Montreal the rate is 4¼c. From Toledo to Montreal the rate is 3¾c. The Trunk Line Association and the Marine Association of the United States are taking steps to divert this trade back into its old channels. The railway companies can accomplish the necessary remedy by making their rates equal to the Canadian rates. American railroads have not been celebrated in the past for their patriotic sacrifices, so it appears as though Canada would continue to hold the trade, especially in view of the fact that, other things being equal, she possesses superior natural advantages over New York.

OPPORTUNITIES IN JAPAN.

With the position Japan is assuming in the commercial world to-day and with the large trade that is being done with that country by European and United States business houses, the question arises as to what markets Canada may develop with advantage to have a part in this rapidly-extending business. In a recent report from Alexander Maclean, Canadian trade commissioner in Japan, the subject is treated very fully, and it is shown that large opportunities exist for the development of Canadian export trade with this country.

The principal item of export at present seems to be flour, but as yet the possibilities of this business are only touched on. During January and February of this year $14 586 worth of flour was sent over, and this, it is encouraging to note, was about $5,000 in advance of the business done in the same period in 1907.

Japanese importers speak very highly of sample shipments of bacon and also of cheese, and Canadian butter has already gained some hold on the market, though through some injudicious shipping in 1906 its reputation was somewhat injured.

The commissioner's report indicates that business in all these lines could be largely developed, as well as that in certain classes of paper and in some lines of machinery.

The reason why trade with Japan up to this time has not developed more rapidly seems to be that Canadian shippers even with the superior natural facilities afforded here, cannot compete in price with European and American houses. The fact is also in evidence that Canadian business methods are not altogether suited to customers in the Orient and that our shipping facilities are not of the best.

WHERE CONTINUITY COUNTS.

Every advertisement does not catch the eye of every customer, any more than one blow of a hammer drives a nail home.

Continuous advertising is the secret of successful advertising. It is almost sure to meet the eye of every customer or probable customer in time.

A Canadian manufacturer whose products are known on both sides of the boundary line, uses space regularly in one of the New York dailies as well as in Canadian trade and daily newspapers. He was recently told by one of his friends that although he occasionally reads the daily paper in question that he never saw his advertisement.

"Am not surprised at that," he replied, "but some day you will see it; and the oftener you see it the greater will be the impression it will make upon you. That is why I advertise continuously."

The success of this manufacturer dates from the day he began to advertise. And his faith in advertising is based on experience.

CHANGES IN TOBACCO.

The significant feature of the grocery markets this week was the announcement of a change in the styles and prices of Macdonald's tobaccos, which comes as a result of the imposition of the new duties at the first of the month. The change in duties and excise, which are explained in detail elsewhere, work out to give a tax of 47c cents on manufactured tobacco, against 39c as formerly, with an additional duty of 16c on blending material used in the plug.

To meet this, the manufacturer has reduced the weight of plugs, now making nine to the pound, instead of eight as formerly, and has also raised the price on the various lines from 10 to 11 cents a pound. The change in sizes has been made so that the retailer could still sell 10-cent plugs. The selling terms have also been changed and now no discount is allowed.

The change will be of little interest to the jobber; though he makes a slightly better margin under the new arrangement. The retailer, however, will be under some little handicap, in that he has to sell nine plugs for the same or less profit as he formerly made on eight.

The direct reflect will fall, however, on the consumer, who will get a smaller plug, and it is thought that this will have some effect in increasing the consumption of the cheaper grades of tobacco.

As yet, Sir Wm. Macdonald is the only manufacturer to announce a change. It is expected, however, that the other companies operating in Canada will be forced to follow suit.

A FORWARD STEP IN B.C.

The announcement of the formation of a provincial retail grocers' association in British Columbia, noted elsewhere in this issue, marks a forward step in the position of the retail trade in that province, and shows also how successful the smaller local organizations have proved themselves. The several towns and cities represented at the organization meeting in Vancouver have live local organizations and the value of these has become so apparent that the advantages of a central organization were appreciated.

British Columbia is ahead of the older provinces in this respect and is following the movement for central organization which has been working for several years among the retail trade in the United States. Across the line not only local and state organizations are doing good service, but a national association has been in existence for several years. The strength to which this has attained and the prestige it holds among the trade was evidenced very materially at the recent convention of the association in Boston.

British Columbia grocers are to be congratulated on being the first in the Dominion to organize such an association. The step taken is one which The Grocer has advocated for some of the other provinces for some time and it is hoped that now the path has been laid this example may be followed by the other provinces and that in reasonable time a Dominion retail grocers' association may be formulated. The importance of such an organization as an aid to the retailer and as a means of uplifting the trade generally cannot be over estimated.

The aims of the British Columbia organization, as outlined at the first meeting are exceedingly comprehensive and if the policy is carried out the association will indeed be a blessing to the grocers of the province. They propose to foster social feeling, to obliterate district differences and inspire confidence among the members of the trade, to correct excessive and unmercantile opposition, such as price-cutting, jobbers selling at retail, peddling, adulteration of goods, the use of fictitious labels and dishonest weights and measures. The association will also watch and influence legislation toward the better protection of capital, will assist in collecting accounts, aid in enforcing Sabbath observance and will also look after interests which individual effort cannot accomplish.

ONTARIO'S FISHERIES.

The yield of Ontario's fisheries during the past year aggregated $1,935,024-90. This is $200,000 more than the catch of 1906, and establishes a record. The Provincial Fish and Game Department find it impossible to enforce the fishery regulations owing to the action of the Dominion Department in abolishing the close season for whitefish in Lakes Erie and Huron. The superintendent recommended the appointment of special inspectors to prevent the illegal catching and shipping of immature and under-sized fish.

Retail Merchants in Convention

Annual Meeting Held in Galt Wednesday and Thursday, June 17 and 18—Discussion of Numerous Resolutions—Delegates Well Entertained.

The ninth annual convention of the Ontario Provincial Board of Retail Merchants' Association of Canada was held in Galt on Wednesday and Thursday, June 17 and 18, and was pronounced the most successful convention in the history of the organization.

The first day's proceedings began at ten o'clock on Wednesday morning. President H. C. Ellis, Ottawa, took the chair and called the meeting to order. A committee composed of Adam Ballantyne, B. W. Ziemann and M. Moyer, Toronto was elected to nominate committees to take up the resolutions presented at the convention, and the meeting adjourned until the afternoon, Geo. T. Hamilton, Galt, being deputed registrar.

At the opening of the afternoon session Mayor Patterson, on behalf of the town of Galt, welcomed the retail merchants to "the Manchester of Canada."

After a number of other appreciative addresses regarding the work of the association and the town's welcome, Secretary Trowern read a list of resolutions which were referred to committees for consideration.

Getting Down to Business.

When the secretary's report was called for E. M. Trowern made a few preliminary remarks regarding transient traders' legislation, the Division Court Act, bread inspection and parcels post, was about to read a typewritten article when the chairman on a point of order, said the secretary was not keeping exactly to what was wanted. "What was required," said Mr. Ellis, "was a written report of the business of the past year." C. W. Kelly, Guelph, backed up the president and as Mr. Trowern had no such written report to offer the convention went on to the next item.

No Treasurer's Report.

Shortly after the treasurer's report was called for. Mr. Moyer began by discussing details of organization. C. W. Kelly, Guelph, interposed, asking if the treasurer had no report to offer. Mr. Moyer replied that he had no written report.

It was a queer thing, said Mr. Kelly, if neither the secretary or treasurer had a written statement to present. He asked in what position was the organization financially?

The Association's Position.

The treasurer stated that during the past year, although the membership numbered 5,233, but 1,789 members had paid the yearly fee of $2. There were replies yet to come in though, said Mr. Moyer, from various parts of the province.

Mr. Kelly asked if the treasurer could not submit a statement showing the receipts and expenditures for the past year, and also inquired if the association had no auditor. He did not in the least reflect on any officer of the association. He knew, and every member knew, that both the secretary and treasurer were working hard for the interests of the association, but the treasurer, for his own protection, should insist on an auditor. He suggested that a special committee be appointed to deal with the treasurer's statement and Mr. Moyer asked that one be named at once. Geo. T. Hamilton, Galt; F. Watters, Guelph; Fred C. Higgins, Toronto; H. C. Ellis Ottawa; W. H. Davis, Brockville; A. Ballantyne, Hamilton; with the treasurer and secretary were named and were asked to report with the committees on resolutions.

At the resumption at 7.30 F. Watters, Guelph, chairman of the special finance committee, reported that they were unable to make a report and recommended the appointment of three members to go to Toronto to look over the books, make a report, and try to put the association on a sound, financial basis.

On a question as to the financial standing of the association, the treasurer said the association was about $2,000 in debt, but very probably things would not be so bad as this.

Mr. Moyer told of the hard work Mr. Trowern had done for the association with little and often no remuneration.

Mr. Kelly said it was the first time he heard that things were as they were. He had no doubt at all that the officers had done their work well, but the fact was that they had too much to do. "We are not bankrupt," he said, "but financially embarrassed. We owe $2,000, but we do not know to whom we owe this, nor how the debt is made up. This organization can and should be placed on a firm foundation."

An Incorporated Body.

T. A. Rutherford here asked: "Is this association an incorporated body or is it one of Mr. Trowern's own organization."

E. M. Trowern said he was glad of this opportunity to enter the debate. He was glad of this opportunity to enter the debate. He did not explain in the afternoon the reason why he did not present a written report. Would it have looked well if the statement was presented that of 5,000 members, but 1,700 had paid their fees? Would it have looked well if the report showed the association was $2,000 in debt? "Why, we have been $5,000 behind, and how many knew it," he said, "and yet we came out all right. Now that you know the state of affairs, I know you will help on by individual effort the work of the association."

Answering the question as to "Trowern's own organization," Mr. Trowern gave a short resume of the history of the the association.

It is a properly incorporated body under the laws of the Province.

"As to the payment of officers," said Mr. Trowern, "it was arranged that I should get a salary, but there was for a time no money to pay a salary, and I was asked to work on a commission basis. The money owing me, $1,500, I voluntarily relinquish—I wiped out the debt, because I knew that some day we would be over the hill, and because I had confidence that the boys would stay behind the association.

"Now, as to the money spent. It has cost us thousands of dollars in legislation—in amending the Criminal Code; in opposing the Co-operative Bill and other matters. Hundreds of dollars have been spent in sending deputations to Ottawa. As to immediate relief, you must get more members, and get the back dues. The trouble is you do not know what a good thing you have got."

Appointing an Auditor.

A. Ballantyne said all knew now how overworked both the secretary and treasurer had been, and thought an auditor should look over the books and be ready to present some statement when the committee met in Toronto.

The President thought that for the future it should be understood that all reports from officers of the association should be presented in writing.

A. L. Green said the constitution covered the point, and believed the special committee would render great assistance to the executive officers.

W. Farrar moved that an auditor be appointed and that the committee meet in Toronto at the time the Dominion Board convenes, Sept. 8 and 9, but though the convention sympathized with the motion, no member seconded the suggestion.

F. Waters then moved, seconded by T. A. Rutherford, that "three members be appointed to audit the books and devise ways and means to put the association on a good financial basis." At the suggestion of a number of members, an amendment was made that "six names be added to this committee." On the motion and amendment being put, they were carried unanimously.

The members of this committee are R. W. Dockeray, Toronto; C. W. Kelly, Guelph; Fred. C. Higgins, Toronto; T. A. Rutherford, Galt; J. F. Halloway, Toronto; W. Farrar, Hamilton; A. Ballantyne, Hamilton; B. W. Ziemann, Preston; and H. C. Ellis, Ottawa, with the Secretary and Treasurer.

Thus ended a very warm and wordy, though earnest discussion, which will, no doubt, make for the best interests of the organization.

Some Resolutions.

The convention then took up the resolutions submitted by the various committees, regarding the Co-operative Societies Bill, the Short Weight on Car Lots of Coal, the Bad Pay Reporting lists, the amendment to the Gold and Silver Marking Act, endorsing the Master Bakers' amendment to inspect bread in factories, in opposition to the tax on proprietary medicines, regarding educating the press to pay more attention to retail merchants, against any parcels post system, recommending the advisability of forming a Chamber of Commerce, regarding amendment of the criminal code to give merchants and manufacturers the same rights as those enjoyed by organized labor.

All these resolutions carried, and at the committee's request the following telegram was sent to the Secretary of State, Senator Scott :

"That the retail merchants of the Province of Ontario, assembled in convention at Galt, again strongly protest against the passing of the Co-operative Act now before the Dominion Senate."

A resolution on "the injury to local trade by the suburban service to cities and towns" was not considered, it being held that no one can tell at present whether or not such service would be injurious.

The report of the committee as amended was then adopted.

Committee Resolutions.

W. Farrar, chairman of the legislation committee, presented the following resolutions, which the committee had concurred in :

That the rate charged retail coal dealers under the Assessment Act should be reduced ; that the Government's attention should be called to the unworkable condition of the present Peddlars' and Transient Traders' Act, and it should be amended ; that the proposed amendment to the Municipal Act allowing municipalities to prevent merchants from displaying signs, etc., be opposed ; that action should be taken to prevent amendment to the Shops Regulation Act which would affect the hours of female clerks ; that the amendment to the Milk Inspection Act be endorsed ; that the proposed amendment to the Pharmacy Act be endorsed ; that the Government be impressed with the necessity of amending the Division Court Act so that small debts can be collected more cheaply.

"This last resolution," Mr. Trowern said, "was to place the retailer in the same position as the laborer and the mechanic. The Provincial Government promised consideration of a reduction of fees, but the bailiffs had come before the Legislature 800 strong and the Government took cold feet and deferred introducing a relief measure. What retailers wanted was, at least, a reduction of fees."

With regard to the hawkers' and peddlars' license resolution, Mr. Trowern said it would be well to concentrate on some one matter at a time instead of trying to force all the measures. The association should try to see if the law governing peddlars could not be amended at the next session of the Legislature.

The subject of free school books was given considerable attention at the Thursday morning's session and a resolution referred to the executive for a report from the stationers' section.

For a Standard Potato Bag.

At the instance of A. Ballantyne, a resolution that the Dominion Board should attempt to have the act regarding the weight of a bag of potatoes amended to 90 pounds, was changed to read "75 pounds." Mr. Ballantyne said that at the present time there is a standard weight of 60 pounds to the bushel, but no standard for a bag of potatoes. In Quebec there is a standard of 80 pounds to a bag of potatoes, and in the Dominion there is a standard of 50 pounds for onions.

T. A. Rutherford opposed this on behalf of the drygoodsmen, saying all knew that potato bags received the greatest wear and tear, and that were the standard changed from 90 to 75 lbs. so that old sugar bags could be used, many drygoodsmen would have useless stock left on their hands.

F. C. Higgins, Toronto, said this was no selfish question at all. He quite agreed with Mr. Ballantyne, and at any rate some standard should be set for the protection both of the merchant and the public.

The resolution as amended then carried.

R. W. Dockeray then presented the following resolutions from the committee on general trade :

That the association is in favor of the public control of general utilities ; that the action of the Coal Dealers' Association in requesting a removal of duty of 53 cents per ton on vessel fuel in Ontario be endorsed ; that a card be prepared to be placed in stores dealing with the question of advertising solicitors for local functions.

All these resolutions carried. The latter one was recommended because it is already adopted by some of the branches of the R.M.A.

To Strengthen the Association.

The following resolution was strongly recommended as it had special significance for the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association, and reference also to the Hardwaremen's Association:

"That the officers of single line associations not connected with the R.M.A. be interviewed with the object of securing their assistance, co-operation and membership."

A belated resolution as to whether the weekly half-holiday should be supported by the Provincial Association was, after discussion, left for the various branch associations.

The New Officers.

This concluded the business of the convention and nominations were called for the various officers of the association. The elections resulted as follows: President, B. W. Ziemann, Preston; 1st Vice-President, Adam Ballantyne, Hamilton; 2nd Vice-President, C. W. Kelly, Guelph; Treasurer, M. Moyer, Toronto; Secretary, E. M. Trowern, Toronto; Auditor, R. W. Dockeray, Toronto.

B. W. Ziemann, Adam Ballantyne, H. C. Ellis, M. Moyer and E. M. Trowern were appointed to represent the Provincial Association on the Dominion Board.

H. C. Ellis, on calling Mr. Ziemann to the chair, thanked all the officers and delegates for the help they had rendered him in the past; and Mr. Geen led off with "He's a Jolly Good Fellow," when a vote of thanks was tendered the retiring president.

Votes of thanks were tendered the local members for their assistance in looking after the delegates; to the Galt Horse Show Association and the manager of the opera house for the invitations extended them; to the Mayor of Galt, and to the manufacturers, who extended invitations to visit their plants.

Next Meeting in Brockville.

W. H. Davis, on behalf of Brockville, invited the R. M. A. to meet in the Thousand Isles city next year, and C. N. Greenwood and P. J. Kelly presented the claims of Stratford. The convention thought the east should get a turn next year, so the R.M.A. will meet in Brockville on June 18 and 19, 1909.

Entertained by Local Branch.

On Thursday afternoon the delegates were treated to a drive about town by the members of the Galt branch. The drive led to Victoria Park, and on to the show grounds, where the Galt Horse Show Association took them in tow, and showed them some of the finest horse flesh exhibited in Canada.

The local Reception Committee, who looked after the welfare of the visitors, were: A. Deans (chairman), F. H. Chapple, N. L. Moore, A. M. Edwards, W. W. Wilkinson, Geo. T. Hamilton and T. A. Rutherford.

WHOLESALERS MEET IN HAMILTON.

Discuss Trade Questions in Friendly Way on Tuesday.

An informal meeting of the wholesale grocers of Western Ontario was held at Hamilton on Tuesday, with a view to discussing trade conditions generally, and in a fraternal way.

Members of the trade were present from Toronto, Hamilton, London, Brantford and Guelph.

Several of the matters discussed at the meeting of the Canada Exchange at Quebec last week were considered, and the present situation in sugar, canned goods, fruits and other lines was discussed. No action of any kind was taken, the meeting being of a fraternal rather than a social nature. After the meeting the visiting members of the trade were entertained at luncheon by the Hamilton wholesalers at the Hamilton club.

The Toronto Grocery Clerks' Association are arranging a picnic in High Park for July 1st. All grocery clerks in the city are invited.

Heavy Rains During the Week Cause Apprehension in Some Districts—Export Wheat in Demand—Winnipeg's New Station Begun—a Good Week in General.

The Western Viewpoint, by our Special Winnipeg Correspondent.

The week has been one of heavy rains and dark weather, and there has been a slight feeling of uneasiness for fear the crop is getting too much rain, and a number of inquiries have come from the East regarding this. There has been too much rain in isolated spots all over Manitoba and Saskatchewan and large sections of Alberta south, but there has been none too much in the wheat belt generally, and where they are suffering from rain in Alberta there is comparatively little crop. There has, however, been quite sufficient rain for all requirements, and the Western farmer would like a hot sun and light winds without any more rain for a couple of weeks, at least, and as we are wearing well on to the end of June no doubt we will get these conditions. June is our rainy month by all traditions, and if we do not get June rains we are very liable to have to go without rain altogether. The years in the past when the whole Canadian West has suffered from too much rain are very few, and there are long gaps between.

The wheat market has been rather an interesting one for the week, as there has been quite a trade developed in Winnipeg October for export. There has been no excitement and no great rush, but a quiet, steady working of a few loads every day. The representative of one of the largest Canadian exporting houses said the other day that all signs pointed to a very large and very early demand for Canadian wheat for export. His explanation was that Old Country stocks had been allowed to run abnormally low owing to the high price of the last crop, and that British millers had hoped to fill up on hard winter wheat. The damage to the winter wheat crop has now assumed definite and serious proportions, so that supplies from that source will neither be so early or so liberal as at first anticipated, and hence the demand for our wheat. More October has been sold for export this season to date than up to the end of June last year.

The oat corner mentioned last week seems to be progressing. The man who holds the oats reports large sales and shipments to the East during the past week at prices that will net him 44c afloat, Fort William, and this makes the Winnipeg price look like a legitimate one. There are some big shorts on this market, and there will no doubt be some squealing before the deal is closed out. The end of the month is anticipated with a good deal of fun by those not in the oat deal, and a good deal of apprehension by those who are.

The live stock market has been dull and without feature for the week, the receipts being small and not of extra good quality. The coming week, however, an improvement is looked for, both as to better weather and the quality of the receipts. Cook, of Newdale, the first man in Manitoba to give a practical demonstration of winter feeding in the open in Manitoba, is shipping in the last bunch of his winter's feeding and it is expected there will be a rush among dealers for this lot.

One of the signs of the times in the West is the gigantic enterprise of bringing the steamer Alberta by water from Prince Albert to Winnipeg. In the good old days there used to be much talk of a permanent water route of this kind, but it has never been found feasible and probably never will be for regular traffic. The steamer Alberta, however, had been built for Saskatchewan trade and found unsuitable or the expected trade never developed. Any way, it was found by the owners that they had no use for her at Prince Albert, and could make good use of her on the Red River at Winnipeg, where the demand for excursion steamers is steadily developing, and which will increase still more rapidly once the St. Andrew's locks are ready for use. The bold scheme of bringing her down the Saskatchewan River, running the Grand Rapids and crossing Lake Winnipeg, was devised, and has now been satisfactorily accomplished. This is the first big steamer to ever run those rapids, and even she did not manage it without some damage, which, however, was quickly repaired and on Friday, June 19th, she arrived at Winnipeg where she is being overhauled and thoroughly refitted for river excursion traffic.

One of the events of the week was the arrival in Winnipeg of John D. Matheson, the civil engineer, representing Warren & Wetmore, the architects for the great union depot of the C. N. R. and the G.T.P. Mr. Matheson is taking up his permanent residence in Winnipeg until such time as the depot is completed. The driving of the piles started on Saturday, June 20th, and as soon as that is done work on the masonry will commence and a very large gang of men be employed. Mr. Matheson states that it is the expectation to have the roof on before snow flies this fall.

All the offices for the working staff have been completed and the storage building for cement and other materials is now finished and full. It is no light matter to get ready to fill a $1,000,000 contract and evidently the men in charge have realized the need of getting everything to hand before the actual work of construction begins. The piles are to be of cement, a steel case being driven down, the core removed and the space filled with cement.

Real estate dealers state that though there is really no activity in city property there is quite steady demand for inside stuff and an equally steady demand for farms. The latter is expected to increase with the influx of American home seekers.

Wholesale trade is fairly active and one of the signs of expanding business is the remodelling of the big dry goods house of Gault Bros., Limited. At the time they erected their block, a few years ago, a little less than one-half of it was leased to a stationery house, Clark Bros. Now the growing demands of their business have caused them to dismiss their tenants and take the whole of this space, 50x120, and three storeys, into their business. The place is now being prepared for the reception of their fall stock.

During the week the first C.P.R. train over what is known as the Kirkella branch, ran into the town of Saskatoon on the banks of the Saskatchewan. The Board of Trade of that enterprising town made this the occasion of an excursion, to which the wholesale men of Winnipeg were invited and to which many of them went. It was a liberal education for some of those who remember this section in the old days when the only means of reaching Saskatoon was over the Long Lake Prince Albert line as it was called. The thing that first gave Saskatoon its boost was the disembarking of the Barr Colony at that point five years ago. From that day to the present it has gone ahead by leaps and bounds, and to-day has some of the finest retail stores in the West. It is situated in a splendid country and now has two railways running in to it and is only a few miles from Warman, on the main line of the C.N.R., so that it practically has communication over three roads. The excursion and the banquet which followed was the Board of Trade's idea of the best way to advertise the town.

Boards of Trade all over the Canadian West are realizing the need of publicity, and are devising ways and means of bringing the special merits of their various sections before the public, but this is, perhaps, the most effective and practical one that has yet been tried.

The week summed up has been a good one for the West, full of movement of business and of hope that has its foundations in solid fact. H. .

Montreal, June 25.

POINTERS—

Butter—Advanced.
Eggs—Declined.
Cheese—Advanced.
Fish—Decline in some lines, advance in others.
Strawberries—Declined.

The past week has been a good one. This fact may be due to the fine natural conditions which have prevailed. We have had fine, bright days and a little rain, which combined, helped the crops ahead nicely and it seems this spirit of progress in the crops has stimulated business. Government statistics are out and show that the land will do its share toward greater commercial activity. The products of the country—butter, cheese and eggs—are arriving in good quantities and exports in some lines have been rather better. Beans still remain high, and uncertainty prevails about their movements. Maple products are very dull. Fish and fruit have had their usual fluctuations. Honey remains quiet and stocks are small. Refined sugar is dull and depressed, and the primary markets on raw have had some small up and down movements, but so far this has not been reflected on the refined market.

SUGAR—The raw sugar market has been in a rather unsettled state but has not affected the refined any yet. In spite of the fact that under natural conditions the demand for sugar should be good at this time of the year, on account of it being the fruit season, the demand is not what it should be. Prices have not changed since last quotation.

TEA—During the week interest was centred on high-grade new Japans and the few parcels of new arrivals were eagerly picked up, as these show good value on the present advanced market. Samples just to hand, representing later pickings, to arrive here in about eight weeks, have also been readily sold. The latest report indicates a high market for second and third crop teas, and at any time an advance may be asked on present quotations. Ceylon greens and blacks have been somewhat quiet, but as stocks here are comparatively small, and the London market remains about the same, a good demand is expected for these teas during the coming week at fall prices. Moyunes and Pingsueys have also been somewhat neglected but it is understood one or two small invoices of Pingsueys, originally consigned to New York, have been sold on this market.

The fig market is pretty well cleaned out, very few lots remaining. New quotations for California dried fruits, it is expected, with the exception of prunes, will be 60 per cent. lower than last year.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL—The publication of the new price list contained no great surprises as the prices as published were more or less all anticipated. The demand during the week has been good for canned fruits and vegetables. Canned meats and fish have met with small demand, with the exception of lobsters, which have been quite active.

TORONTO—Business in 1907 pack goods continues fair, though the fruit season might be expected to affect this to some extent. There has been little really doing in 1908 pack goods though there is a good deal of talk about them.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Steady.

Tobacco—MacDonald's sizes changed and advanced.

Beans—Stiff.

Collections—Somewhat slow.

Toronto, June 25, 1908.

Business in wholesale circles seems rather quieter this week, though there is no apparent reason why this should be so. Collections, too, seem a little slower again, and in a good many cases retailers are holding accounts off until the harvest. Jobbers report that in the majority of cases the small merchants are more prompt in paying up than the larger ones.

About the only change of consequence in the grocery markets during the week was that in Macdonald's tobaccos, details of which are given elsewhere. Other markets are comparatively quiet, with practically no price changes.

SUGAR—The markets abroad show unsteady influence, with some possibilities of decline in raws. Willett & Gray, in explaining the situation, say:

"There has developed a sentiment of uncertainty and uneasiness during the week under review which makes a forecast of the immediate future of the market more difficult. The weakening influence emanates principally from Europe where the possibilities of important importations of Russian Crystals after September 1st are disconcerting. Attention is drawn to the difference between the values of old and new crop beet sugars the old crop now being on the basis of 4.33c for Centrifugals here, and next crop, October-December delivery, at 4.14c per pound. Old and new crop beets must come together at some time and the influences at work indicate the doing so at the lower level rather than the higher, so it may be said that the situation warrants the expectation of a decline of ⅛c per pound in sugar values abroad and a corresponding sympathetic decline in America. Should the decline come soon in both raws and refined there is still time left for another advance later on in this campaign under the influence of the impetus that may be given to the demand for refined sugar at a lower level."

Notwithstanding these weaker reports the local situation seems to remain fairly steady. A large demand is expected in another week, as the preserving season comes on and it seems scarcely possible that any reduction can take place with this and the large summer's business in view. Prices quoted are as follows:

TEA—Business locally continues very quiet, no noticeable change in prices abroad. Common teas show an easier feeling, but the quality offered is very inferior.

COFFEE—Business locally is reported as very satisfactory this week. Prices are on the same basis and the situation abroad shows no material change, though the Brazilian Government continues to dispose of their valorization coffee. Willet & Gray, discussing the situation, say:

"It is not probable that the Government will continue their sales for the present as they have now tested consuming markets and ascertained the value of their holdings by means of auction sales which give a positive and better test than the option markets; and furthermore show that the price basis of 50 franc for the actual coffee is quite different from the 40 franc basis adopted by the Bank of France, this latter being done at the instigation of adversaries to the market, in France.

"News from Santos points out that the incoming crop there does not promise to be of good quality, the uneven flowering and irregular ripening likely to result in a crop inferior in drinking merit as well as the roast. The Government holdings as to quality are decidedly the best in any of the European or American markets, which is easily proven by the fact that in a dull and declining market for options the buyers here of Government coffees have done a very satisfactory business in both quantity and price.

"After the hulling of the new crop has proceeded far enough to ascertain the facts as to the poor quality, it is probable that the Government will keep the balance of their stocks out of the market and hold for a much higher price. The total amount of Santos coffee in the States belonging to the Government is ascertained to be less than 700,000 bags, the remainder of the Government holdings here consisting of Rio coffees, which the Government has decided to withdraw completely from the market during the 1908-1909 crop; and to ascertain whether the production in Rio is further deteriorating, the small incoming crop showing a big falling off of production in that State."

RICE AND TAPIOCA—Some little increase in demand is shown as the hot weather advances. Small shipments continue to arrive locally but there is nothing of particular interest in the situation. Prices are unchanged.

BEANS—The market continues stiff though demand is not particularly active. Local stocks are very light and dealers are chary of quoting. Prices remain at the same place as last week.

TOBACCO—A significant change in McDonald's tobaccos was announced during the week, which will be interesting to both jobbers and retailers. The change includes a difference in plug weight, 9's being now manufactured instead of 8 to the pound as formerly and the prices are also raised. The change is made as the result of the new duties which came into operation finally, on June 1st. Before these were imposed the duty on stem tobacco was 14c and excise 25c. It is now 42c on stem and 5c on excise. This works out to a basis of 47c under the new arrangement as against 39c formerly. There is also a special tax on blending material used in the plug of 16c per pound, which in smoking amounts to 20 per cent., and in chewing to 30 per cent. In the face of these changes the manufacturer says he is forced to make a change. How the change is worked out is shown herewith by a comparison of the new prices to the retailer with the old.

FIFTEEN YEARS' SERVICE.

W. L. Edmonds, General Manager MacLean Publishing Co., Presented With Handsome Desk.

A pleasant event took place at the office of the MacLean Publishing Company on Tuesday of this week, when W. L. Edmonds, the general manager of the company, and former editor of The Grocer, was presented with a handsome and massive mahogany desk, specially made by the Canadian Office & School Furniture Co. The presentation was made by Col. J. B. MacLean in the presence of the entire business, editorial and mechanical staff of the company, and was made with a view to marking in an appreciative way the completion of Mr. Edmonds' fifteenth year of service with the company.

In his remarks Col. MacLean said:

"A short time ago our general manager completed fifteen years of continuous service with us. I have asked you to assist me to-day in presenting him with this desk to mark the occasion. I want him to be good enough to accept it as a formal but slight acknowledgment of the most loyal and faithful services any concern could wish to have. It is nearly 20 years since I first made Mr. Edmonds' acquaintance, and I was drawn to him by the thoroughly, conscientious, painstaking way in which he discharged his duties. Most newspaper men are content with the information furnished by one man. It was not so with Mr. Edmonds. In preparing his market reports he saw every firm, large and small, who could give him the most remote possible information. I have known him to call day after day for weeks to discuss market situations before getting anything of the slightest value. But that made no difference. He knew that any day something of the greatest importance might develop, and it generally did. It was not until he completed his long round that he formed any conclusions as to prices, values or market or business situations. It is this thoroughness with which he himself does his work and inspired his assistants to do theirs that has put our papers where they are—that even the courts of law have from time to time accepted their quotations as final evidence in important mercantile disputes."

Mr. Edmonds made a happy speech in reply, referring to the pleasant years he had spent with the company and also of the kind treatment he had always received from Col. MacLean. Continuing, he referred to his early newspaper career, and the assistance it had been to him in his present position. He started in 1875 in the composing room of the Mail. In 1885 he assumed control of the Cannington Gleaner, but sold this paper in 1888 and returned to Toronto, where he was engaged in journalistic work on the daily press. For two or three years prior to his connection with the MacLean Company he filled the positions of city editor and commercial editor of the Toronto World. Mr. Edmonds was the Liberal candidate for East Toronto in 1905.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 9 a.m. Thursday, June 25, 1908.)

POINTERS—New prices (1908 pack) canned fruits and vegetables.

Rolled Oats—Cheaper.

Pearl Barley—Decline in price.

Except for the announcement of new prices for the west on 1908 pack of canned vegetables and fruits and declines in rolled oats and pearl barley, there are no important quotable changes on the local market this week. Business continues fairly active, but no very marked improvement is expected for a couple of months yet until the harvest is either under way and the crop absolutely assured. There is no denying the fact that until the crop money gets in circulation there will be a marked scarcity of ready money.

Fortunately the outlook was never better at this time of year for a heavy crop. From all parts of the west reports come in telling of the most gratifying crop prospects and there is every reason to believe that in a few months' time there will be a return of the prosperity to which the west has been long accustomed. The outlook is most hopeful.

CANNED GOODS—New prices for 1908 delivery have been announced on fruits and vegetables and detailed quotations will be found below. It will be noted that there is a general reduction in prices, a change which will be welcomed by the trade as the high prices of the last year discouraged consumption. We quote :

Flour is Easier in Halifax With General Business Good—Good Trade Reports From St. John—Women Clerks Doing Well in Montreal Store.

HALIFAX.

June 20.—Jobbers report considerable improvement in business during the past week. The market gardeners are now coming in with their products, which they readily turn into cash, and circulate the money purchasing other lines of goods. The successful fishing season has enabled the fishermen to buy goods with the ready cash, and, on the whole, business is considered quite satisfactory.

Butter is coming in quite freely, but the price keeps up, although some good dairy stock in large tubs can be purchased for 21 cents. Eggs are still firm at 18 cents.

The flour market is a little easier, as a result of a falling off in the demand. While trade is somewhat quiet at present, the jobbers are satisfied with the conditions, which, they say, are only temporary. Ontario blends of flour are quoted at $5.40 to $5.60, Manitoba flour at $6.50 to $6.75. Bran has declined $1 per ton, and is now quoted from $25 to $26. Rolled oats are a little firmer at $6.15 to $6.30, and corn meal is selling at $1.85 to $1.90 per bag. Beans (hand picked), $2 to $2.05, and oats from 57c for Manitoba, to 60c and 62c for Prince Edward Island stock.

The fruit business is in an excellent condition, and large quantities of stock are being turned over. The direct boat from Boston brought a large lot of fine strawberries early in the week, which were quickly bought up, but towards the close of the week the market was almost bare. The berries retailed at 25c per box. The first new lot of Jamaica oranges arrived this week, and they are selling at $5 to $6 per barrel. The quality is only fair. Lemons have advanced 50c, and are now quoted at $4. Bananas are in good supply, but they are still firm at $2 to $2.50. Pines are $2 per dozen, and peaches $3.50 per crate. The peaches are of fine flavor, but they are very small.

ST. JOHN.

June 23.—All indications point to a bumper year in agriculture in New Brunswick. The farmers got their seeds in fairly early and there have recently been welcome showers of rain that have helped wonderfully. A banner potato crop is predicted and in all other lines of vegetation good crops are anticipated.

The first native strawberries of the season arrived in the market last week. It will be a week or more, however, before they come in any quantity.

The catches of harbor salmon have been only fair so far. The fish taken have, however, been of good size, and as the season has some time to run, it may average as good as the past few seasons.

Several shipments of salmon from Newfoundland have passed through here in the last few weeks, en route to Boston. The cases are opened here and the fish re-iced so that they arrive in the Boston market in good condition.

Very little activity was displayed in the local markets during the past week. Larger quantities of dried fish are now offering and prices have fallen off. In the produce line, butter and eggs have also declined in value. Butter is quoted at 17 to 20 cents and eggs at 15 to 18 cents wholesale. New vegetables are commencing to come in, but the price is high.

Fire at Charlottetown, P.E.I., on June 18 destroyed the stock of Jenkins & Son, one of the leading grocery firms on the island.

Meat for use in this district continues to arrive. John Hopkins received recently a mixed car, dressed beef and pork, from a Montreal house, which is being distributed. The same concern brought in a car in February last.

MONTREAL.

June 23.—Col. Labelle, local manager of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., left Friday last by the Victorian for Liverpool. Col. Labelle, who is in command of this year's Canadian Bisley team, will make a tour of the continent, returning in about ten weeks' time. A large gathering went down to the boat Thursday evening to see the colonel and the members of the team off. Tuesday evening Col. Labelle was the guest of honor at a banquet given by his friends in the Club Lafontaine.

At the last meeting of the Montreal Retail Grocers' Association it was decided to hold the annual picnic at Highgate Springs, Vt., on July 18. The committees which have been appointed to take charge of the arrangements will commence at once to make the necessary preparations for the event. It is expected that a good time will be in store, as the place selected is a popular one.

Chief Campeau, of the city police force, has been memorialized by the grocers of the city on the contravention of the Sunday selling law, and he has promised to make an example of the offenders if they persist in the practice.

Business during the past week has, taken altogether, been good. It is generally expected that at this season the larger grocers will be hit rather hard, owing to the exodus of the leisure class into the country. Although we have had very warm weather, and there is every evidence that people are going to the country, the large grocers report the best sort of business, while some in the quarters where people do not go away, report rather a quiet time.

Ald. L. A. Lapointe, grocer, corner Quesnel and Dominion Streets, has been elected president of the Canadian Association of Municipalities.

In conversation with various men in the trade, it is interesting to note their peculiarities, and in almost every case there can be found some little fad possessed by each. There is one man in this city whose store is of the good, ordinary variety on the inside, but the exterior is to this grocer the apple of his eye. The signs, of which there are many, are fresh in appearance and hang with a geometrical precision, the windows shine with an extraordinary brilliancy, and what stock he has outside for display shows the same precise arrangement. All of this is edifying. Our grocer advanced the theory that a good outside showing would predispose people favorably and it is, as he said, "you must get the people at hand to sell them." This is a rule which applies in all phases of commercial life. First impressions, if good, are valuable. A prominent grocer in this city employs a large number of girls in his store. This opens another field for women who have already invaded many which it was thought belonged to men exclusively. When questioned about their efficiency, he said he found them very useful as clerks, "but," he added, "I will always have to employ men, because the heavy character of some of the work requires them."

There are certain things to do around a grocery store which a girl could not possibly attend to, as she would not be physically equal to the task. For waiting on customers and handling the lighter things, she seems, in this case at least, to have been an immense success.

RETURNED FROM TRIP ABROAD.

A. E. Carson, manager for Canada for Thomas J. Lipton returned to the Toronto office on Saturday, after a trip to England and Ireland.

Mr. Carson's principal visit was, of course, to London, where he made a visit, his first, by the way, to the various establishments of the company. He was royally entertained by Sir Thomas and was much impressed with the evident magnitude of the business. A visit was also made to the firm's branches at Glasgow and Liverpool, and a trip to Dublin was also enjoyed. Mr. Carson comes back with a new zeal for business.

BURNED OUT AT BURK'S FALLS.

G. C. Church & Co., general merchants; I. Davidovitch, general merchant: Lamb & Smith, grocers; J. J. Mitchell, grocer and confectioner, and F. G. Reaveley, grocer and confectioner, were among the firms burned out at Burk's Falls, Ont., on Sunday, June 21.

A List of the Merchants in Prince Rupert—General News of the Province and District.

VANCOUVER.

June 30.—The march of the strawberry is now on, but it is only until the last day or so that the price has come down to anything beyond the luxurious point. On Wednesday locals that came in by Tuesday evening's train jobbed at about $3, being a drop from $3.50, and 15c berries were given the retailer, or two for a quarter. Before that they went at three for 50c, these being the Hood River product. That was only on Monday and Tuesday, however, two for 45c being the best before that. In Seattle, they are selling at 5c a box, and it was thought if the warm weather kept on the price here would fall rapidly. Cloudy and cool as it now is, the berry grower will profit as the crop will not be rushed so fast.

Some Alberta and Eastern creamery butter has arrived on the market, and is being jobbed at between 27c and 28c, making it possible to retail at two pounds for 65c, as compared with the local creamery at 35c retail. The demand for local is firm and the lower price of the import, even if the quality is excellent, will not have much of a tendency to bring down the price of the other. Eastern eggs, selected stock, are jobbing at 23c, with a cheaper brand, unselected. Local fresh are 28c.

Beekeepers are making strong complaint against the Provincial fruit pest inspectors, who are ordering orchardists to spray their fruit trees while the blossom is on. The result has been that the honey crop will be nearly a failure, one bee man says. The bees instead of being able to get honey from the flowers, have been sipping poison, and not only have they sickened, but depletion of hives has been reported. It is claimed that there is a Dominion regulation prohibiting spraying in blossom time, so that the bees might be saved, but if action were taken under this enactment, the sprayer has the defence that he was ordered by the Provincial authorities. The Provincial Board of Horticulture is making a determined effort to clean out infection, and it is because of this that these results have followed.

The same informant told your correspondent that Chinese, who have leased orchards on Lulu Island, a few miles south of Vancouver, have failed to take steps to kill caterpillars, and now their trees are practically denuded of leaves, and other people's orchards are being overrun with these pests. Caterpillars are very plentiful on the Lower Mainland this summer, and reports come from 60 or 70 miles up the C.P.R. main line that they have been so thick as to make it awkward for the trains. The caterpillars get on the rail at night, because of the warmth, and when crushed their bodies make the rail "greasy."

In regard to the statement that the United States Leather Company had purchased all the hides available on the Pacific Coast, C. G. Bennett, manager of the Fraser River Tannery at New Westminster, states that there were more hides in British Columbia awaiting purchase than any one outside the trade realized. They are what are technically known as "country" hides, as against "packer's" hides. He states that owing to the inferior quality of the local hides, due to careless skinning by butchers, there has not been the same demand in the States for the article from this Province there should be. The Chicago market, he explains, which rules the price of hides everywhere, is very chary of skins that are not clean, and there will have to be an improvement before British Columbia people can secure a market in the South. Mr. Bennett says there is no fear of the supply here falling short.

The following is a list of those in the grocery and allied trades in Prince Rupert: E. A. McEwan, restaurant and bakery; Charles I. Katz, cigars and fruits; Lynch Bros., general merchandise; T. Z. Kruzner, cigars and fruits; M. Willis, bakery and restaurant; George Denoon, meat market; J. A. Kirkptrick, groceries and clothing; Bailey & Timms, Imperial Bakery; Kelly-Carruthers Supply Company; L. Morrow Co., meat market; A. C. Little, cigars, fruits and newspapers; North Coast Commercial Company, general merchandise; Baldwin & Gladman, groceries.

The flea beetle is doing considerable damage among the hop vines at Agassiz and Chilliwack, and Thomas Cunningham, Provincial inspector of fruit pests, is now in those districts seeing what can be done to stop the ravages. The flea beetle has withstood all the standard sprays, and arsenical poisons have no effect. Mr. Cunningham took up a new kind the other day, and not until his return will it be known how effective it has been. It is believed the flea was imported from England, and is now very prevalent here. Last year, tarred cloth was used with good results, but this method cannot be utilized until after the vine has a growth. Large areas of hops are to be found at Agassiz and Chilliwack, and the industry was assuming a fairly large scale until this destructive little insect made its appearance.

A. R. Kelly, organizer for the U.C.T., which held its convention in Vancouver two weeks ago, is endeavoring to organize a branch of the association in Victoria.

J. Ringshaw has opened a delicatessen store at the corner of Yates and Broad Streets, Victoria.

Plunkett & Savage, wholesale fruit and produce brokers, Calgary, have opened a branch in Fernie, B.C., with Lance B. Ramforth in charge.

Hamilton Grocers Making Big Preparations for Picnic—Record Fruit Sales in Guelph—Parry Sound Wants Early Closing.

HAMILTON.

June 23.—The prospects for fruit of all kinds are very good and with a good harvest coming Hamilton people expect to be on Easy Street.

A number of new grocery stores are being started here, principally by farmers and mechanics, who will in the course of a year or two, have gained some experience as to the money to be made in the grocery business.

A committee visited Niagara Falls recently to arrange for the grocers' picnic on July 15. John Forth, the association president, reports that they were received most cordially by the park officials and better arrangements were made than ever before. Last year the grocers carried over 5,000 people on their excursion. This year Mr. Forth says they will beat the record. Two railroads and 100 first-class passenger cars have been engaged to land the crowd at the Falls.

Lucas, Steele and Bristol are giving up their wine and liquor trade and are going to devote their attention entirely to the grocery business. Great regret is expressed by the retail grocers who handle liquor at this move, as they have always been known and esteemed as one of the straightest houses in Canada conducting a liquor business.

A good deal of discussion is going on over the new canned goods prices—some think that the retailer, if consulted, could have given the canners some pointers that might have been of interest to them and have been of mutual benefit. In the meantime, the opinion is gaining ground that the independent canner is likely to cut a large figure in the next year's business. One or two of the leading wholesalers here are advising their customers not to buy canned goods yet.

PERTH.

June 22.—Trade is improving. the town has undertaken sewer extensions and new granolithic walks, the county is giving employment to a number of men in good roads work and the farmers are in good humor over crop prospects so more money is in circulation and more trade is being done.

The first of what promises to be an extra large crop of strawberries was brought last week. Usually Perth dealers have to bring in berries from the Niagara district for a week or two before local berries are ready, but this year very few will be brought in as local supplies will fill the demands.

Have you realized, that in giving goods on credit to a man whose ability or willingness to pay is doubtful, you lose more than the actual amount of the account lost? Perhaps a customer of this kind whose cash trade has been worth quite a lot to you asks you for two pounds of butter till Saturday night. You give him the butter but he somehow forgets to call on Saturday night to settle, and it is ten chances to one that until you collect your 50 cents he spends his cash with your competitor. Does it pay to give credit at all to this class even though you collect their accounts in the long run?

Harry Murray has opened a confectionery, fruit and ice cream business in the Brooks' block, Gore St.

GUELPH.

June 16.—The Victoria Flour Mill, which for as long as the writer can remember, was called Presants' Mill, has been sold to Geo. Young, a gentleman from New Zealand. Mr. Young has had experience in the trade not only in New Zealand, but in Scotland as well.

Considerable dissatisfaction exists in the city over the fact that after offering $10,000 for the extension of the Winter Fair here, there seems to be a hitch somewhere and a great many feel it is about time to either build or let us know where we are at.

The permanent road on Windham St. and St. George's Square is nearing completion and will mean a great boon to the merchants on those streets.

100 cases of lemons sold in 20 minutes was the record made the other afternoon at an auction sale of fruit that arrived in bad condition. The prices ran from 75c. a case up to $2.50. Some were good value, and a number of grocers had sales at 10c. a doz. But after all, bananas at 10c. and lemons at 10c. sometimes make hard selling. People are just as hard or harder to suit with the cheaper fruit and the profits are not so large.

At a meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association, held recently, Dan. A. Scroggie, a grocer from the drop of the hat, was appointed as official collector of accounts for Guelph. Mr. Scroggie will be paid a regular salary by the association and will have an office in the central part of the city. His duty will be to collect all difficult accounts for members and in this he will be assisted by a committee of the members of the association which has been formed. Mr. Scroggie has already commenced his duties.

BRANTFORD.

Brantford, June 22.—Culver Bros. have purchased the butcher shop in connection with the grocery of Huffman & Craig in Eagle Place.

The grocery business of George Montgomery in the east ward has been acquired by Mr. Hagey, who is well known here.

George Foster & Son, wholesale grocers, received recently the first samples of Japan tea, grown this season. The shipment is following. Experts state that the tea is the finest yet received.

The Dominion Labor Gazette of this month contains an article on the co-operative grocery business in Brantford. This has already been reviewed in The Grocer. The movement had its origin in an open discussion in the local press regarding trade and prices. The association are now planning to enter lines other than the grocery trade and in time hope to invade all branches.

The grocery business here during May and thus far in June has been good. There are few complaints. The warm weather has brought a brisk demand in the fruit line. The fact that many people are preparing to go away has also told in the laying in of provisions, and the holiday and circus periods were helpful. The local grocers are all alert to business of this character and reap the advantages to the full.

William Grierson, the wholesale confectioner, has opened a restaurant and ice cream parlor on the central part of Colborne St.

It is a matter of local interest that Kerr Bros., who formerly kept a candy store and ice cream parlor here, are now in New York, where they are doing a most extensive trade in the wholesale line of butter scotch. They have an original brand that is making a big hit and is sold everywhere in the metropolis.

STRATFORD.

June 21.—The grocers are now the only hold-outs against the regular weekly half-holiday. All the other merchants of the city will close their doors at one o'clock on Wednesdays during July and August. From what your correspondent can learn, it is just one ar two of the grocers who refuse to close and make the fruit question their reason. The majority of the grocers are willing and ready to fall in with the other merchants, but as long as one or two will persist in staying open the grocery clerks will have to pound sugar while their companions in clerkdom enjoy the generosity of their employers.

PARRY SOUND.

June 22.—Notwithstanding the quietness,, the grocers in Parry Sound report business up to last year, and with prospects exceedingly bright for a larger tourist trade. Outside visitors are arriving and taking their summer cottages on the surrounding islands. Summer hotels are now open, all of which adds to the till of the grocers.

There is one thing the grocers in Parry Sound lack. That is a uniform closing hour. If they would follow the example of one or two local stores who have decided to close each night at 6 o'clock, it would be much better for the clerks and merchants generally.

Local grocers and merchants generally deeply regretted the death of W. C. Adams, of Davidson-Hay, Toronto. Mr. Adams had many friends in Parry Sound and district, and was a welcome visitor, both in the place of business and the homes of the Parry Sound grocers.

Purvis & Son, grocers, have added to their fixtures an up-to-date meat slicer and in conversation with Harry Purvis, the manager, he said they had doubled their sales since putting it in.

Robt. Holmes, who has for the past six years had charge of "The Walton's" grocery department, has bought the stock of the Gordon Kennedy estate, and with long experience in this line is certain to succeed.

LONDON.

June 22.—H. Ryan, of this city, has the contract for supplying groceries to the military camp at Goderich.

Very few local grocers now remain out of the Retail Grocers' Association. At the last regular meeting two new members were added, in the persons of G. Tupholme and J. A. Henderson, who have at last been brought to a recognition of the benefits of organization.

Wm. Fowler has opened a grocery business in a large new store on the corner of the Wortley Road and Oxford Street.

Mrs. W. E. Gilligan has started a grocery store at the corner of Chesley Ave. and Dame St.

Pineapples are in great demand here, about a carload being delivered to the wholesalers daily. The fruit is shipped by boat from Cuba to Montreal and from there distributed all over the country. A leading dealer in an interview this week said: "Pineapples were never in such demand as they are this year. People are using them as a substitute for home grown fruits which last year were scarce. Hundreds of thousands of pineapples have been sold here the last few weeks and the demand is as steady as ever. People are buying them by the crate and preserving or canning them. Pineapples have never been cheaper than at present and fruit dealers all over the country are handling them in immense quantities. The season will last for a couple of weeks yet." Bananas are also in great demand about five carloads per week being received here. In three weeks or so double that quantity will be needed to supply the demand.

INGERSOLL.

June 23.—An interesting fact which may have not a little to do with the prevailing high prices that are being paid for eggs has just become known. With the view of practising economy many citizens are already laying in their supply of eggs for winter use, notwithstanding the fact that 17 cents per dozen is the ruling figure, nearly as much as in previous winters. The average householder, however, hopes to profit by the experience he had with high prices during the past winter in connection with butter and eggs, And even the high price was not always the only cause for complaint. There were times when one would willingly pay the price had the eggs or butter, as the case may be, have been available. Several citizens who have experimented in other seasons, claim that eggs can be packed at this period of the year and retain their freshness until the winter months. The favorite plan for preserving the eggs seems to be by dipping them in boiling water. This practically cooks the white film next to the shell and as a result the egg then becomes air-tight, as all the pores are closed. After the dipping process the eggs are carefully wrapped in paper and placed in a comparatively cool place. In this town many dozens of eggs have already been preserved by this method, and it is expected that the custom will become very general before the summer is over. Equal precautions in regard to securing butter have been taken by many. This is usually done by arranging with farmers at a distance to fill crocks or firkins as the case may be. There are hundreds who do not want to go through another winter of high prices and the indications on every hand point to more conservative and more business-like methods.

Reports from several producers are to the effect that the cherries this year will also be a good crop. Many people are more interested in cherries than in the other varieties of fruits, and grocers, in particular, sometimes have their troubles in meeting the wants of their customers. However, this season promises to be the exception as far as the local supply is concerned. What is wanted for both the strawberries and the cherries is an occasional rain, followed by sunshine. The cherries in some instances are beginning to take on their ruby hue and they will probably be ready for the market in another week or two.

Grocers generally report a very keen demand for canned goods, particularly peas and corn. The trade in this line is well advanced and the merchants know the importance of keeping their shelves well stocked. During the past few weeks there has been a slight falling off in the demand for vegetables. This is accounted for by the fact that many citizens have gardens of their own from which they are getting their supplies of radishes, lettuce, etc.

ST. CATHARINES.

June 21.—An important business deal was put through recently, when James Howe bought the stock of Frank Garner, of A. Meyer & Co. biscuit manufacturers here. Mr. Howe becomes secretary-treasurer of the company and has direct charge of the financial and bookkeeping departments. The same general policy of the firm will be closely adhered to in the future. Frank Garner, the retiring stockholder, will take about two months' vacation before getting back in business, but at present has no definite plans as to what line he will engage in.

Mrs. H. E. Moore has bought the business lately conducted by Mrs. Cameron on Niagara Street and not Mrs. Edwin Moore, as was stated in this column recently. Mrs. Moore is making a good start and will no doubt find the grocery business equal to her expectations.

Early closing has been inaugurated here among the wholesale trade. W. H. Merriman began on a recent Saturday to close at one o'clock and will continue to do so until September. J. F. Testing expects to do likewise.

W. A. and Mrs. Sherwood have gone on a holiday trip to the west. About two months will be spent visiting points of interest, including Winnipeg, Brandon and a daughter residing in Dakota.

Arvida Bradley, of Bradley & Son, is spending his vacation with friends in Orangeville.

Ed. Gander, McLean Bros. and Foster & Co., are closing each Wednesday at one o'clock during June, July and August.

GALT.

June 23.—The local merchants took considerable interest in the convention of the Retail Merchants' Association, held in this town last week. Almost every merchant was in attendance at one or more of the sessions. The discussions were eagerly followed by the Galt merchants, with the result that they all have a more thorough understanding of the aims and objects of the association.

How about strawberries? The season is in full swing at present, and yet the price remains at three boxes for a quarter. The merchants account for this fact by reason of the recent wet weather which prevented the picking of the fruit. That there is a bumper crop is well known, but the difficulty appears to be in marketing the fruit. "I feel quite safe in stating," said one grocer, "that before the end of the week, the price of strawberries will be down to 5c a box." Another grocer thinks that the price will go even lower.

The grocers are anticipating a big increase in the demand for sugar, occasioned by the approach of the preserving season.

The members of the Retail Merchants' Association closed their stores on Friday afternoon last in order to give their employes an opportunity to attend the horse show.

Imported fruit is beginning to arrive, and already peaches, pears and plums are offered by the more enterprising grocers. The price of this foreign fruit is much below that of previous years, the best quality of peaches selling as low as 15c per dozen.

The market on Saturday was largely attended. Eggs, which were expected to be lower in price, made a jump from 17c to 20c per dozen. In this connection it might be stated that the practice of pickling eggs is increasing yearly. Some years ago it was regarded as a fad to pickle a supply of eggs for use when the prices reached the prohibitive point. The fad has now become almost a necessity, and it would be hard to find a housewife in Galt who has not preserved a supply of eggs against the high-price season.

"The first ripe apples of the season will be offered for sale in about two weeks," said a farmer on the market on Saturday.

W. Koyles has opened a new and up-to-date grocery on McNaughton Street.

CHATHAM.

June 23.—The frost of last week is reported to have had no generally serious effect. Corn withstood it well and fruit was too far advanced to be injured.

H. E. Edgecombe, manager of the Tilbury canning factory, is able to be around, after a couple of weeks' illness.

While attending the Bakers' Convention in Toronto last Thursday, Jas. R. Palmer, of the Palmer Baking Co., was taken suddenly ill and had to be hurried home by the first train. He is improving at last report.

A representative of a large American pickling concern was in the city last week, with a view to considering the advisability of locating a branch in Chatham.

OTTAWA.

June 23.—Vegetables were plentiful on the market and elsewhere to-day. Cucumbers, onions, radishes, lettuce were amongst the vegetables, and there was a fine showing of strawberries at 10c per box, or 9c by the crate. There was a small offering of carrots, which they sold for 5c per bunch.

S. W. Lee has sold his grocery and fruit store situated at 129 Elgin Street, to D. and M. Nichols.

London Grocers Picnic in Detroit

A Host of Retailers and Clerks With Their Wives, Sweethearts and Friends Spent Wednesday, June 17, Across the Border—Visited Baseball Game, Parks and Pleasure Resorts—Incidents of the Trip.

Between eight and nine hundred people, the grocers of London, their wives and their friends, traveled over to Detroit last Wednesday, June 17, on the annual excursion of the London Retail Grocers' Association and a jolly time was enjoyed. The excursion in point of number and entertainment was one of the most successful that has ever been held and the crowd, it is said, was about the happiest-looking lot of people that ever went out of London.

Fun on the Way Up.

The train started in the morning as is usual with excursion trains. One man says "Everybody wore a smile," and those that didn't went to the baggage where refreshments were served to the men by the two Bobs, Bob Ross and Bob Collins, but before the train reached Glencoe President Shaw had to get Walter Nichols, of Sunlight Soap, to lend a hand and the way he pulled the corks was an eye-opener to his many friends, and as one member of the association remarked, he got his experience in selling in bars (of Sunlight). The baggage car quartette made it lively and everybody joined in the chorus. Tom Ranahan, Roy Nopper, Charley Mountjoy and Ed. Ryan composed the quartette.

On the way up President Shaw was elevated and made a neat little speech, thanking all for their attendance and wishing them all an enjoyable time. Vice-President John Diprose was busy passing fruits and confectionery to the ladies. Dick Woods was at his best giving the glad hand to the friends of the grocers and with market clerk Chas. Maker, kept the aisles clear.

The excursion train arrived in Detroit all in good time and the party separated to enjoy themselves in various ways. A good many went out to Belle Isle Park, the city's beauty spot, and spent the entire day there. Some saw the city from the trolleys or from touring automobiles, and some, particularly the young men of the party, it is said, went to visit friends.

At the Ball Game.

The great attraction of the day, however, and the one for which the excursion had been particularly arranged, was the baseball match between the Detroit and Philadelphia teams of the American League. Hundreds of the visitors journeyed out to the ball grounds in the afternoon and the game was thoroughly enjoyed. Several of the visitors were conspicuous for their enthusiasm. For instance, Fred Tobias, of Todhunter, Mitchell, could not sit down in the sixth innings when Detroit started the fireworks by scoring four runs, being the only innings they did score. "Toby" was doing his best to beat out Joe Boyd, of Red Rose Tea; President Shaw, Secretary Hayes and Ed. Ryan, and he had to do something to do it, as these are all noted "fans" and know something about the game. It was a pleasure to see "Wild Bill" Donovan in the box and the way Sam Crawford, "Ty." Cobb and Charley Jones hit that ball in the sixth, when it was needed, made the grocers and their friends feel just as proud of them as Manager Jennings was. The game was thoroughly enjoyed by all the excursionists present.

Other Incidents.

"Dick" Donaghy and "Art" Connor had the smile that won't come off coming out of the ball grounds. They would sooner see a baseball game than eat, but Clem Garvey and McKinley Millsman took them for a ride in their auto after the game and when they got about six miles out the auto broke down and the smile came off. However, the telephone soon brought out another car and they got home safely.

A large majority of the excursionists came home on Wednesday evening, but a number remained for Thursday to see the next day's ball game and also to visit Belle Isle and Electric Park at night.

The committee having charge and who were largely responsible for the success of the outing, was: Thos. Shaw, president; John Diprose, vice-president; G. McCormick, vice-president; E. J. Ryan treasurer; Cyril Hayes, secretary; Wm. T. Mullins, E. E. Linnell, Fred Travers, H. S. Marshall, C. J. Farr, J. H. Wilkey, R A. Ross.

man, of Elliott, Marr & Co., being very much in evidence, more especially on the return trip. Of course, they are not married like Walter Hungerford, of A. M. Smith & Co., and Wm. Turnbull, of Edward Adams & Co., so that accounts for their popularity with some of the ladies.

Scandrett Bros. were well represented, there being no less than twelve employes of their firm on the train. Their city traveler, Charley Furness and their clerk, Harry Bell, made the fastest trip around Belle Isle in an auto, in fact the rest of the party thought they were shaving trees.

Among the travelers along from out of town were Walter Nichols, of Sunlight Soap; Fred. Tobias, of Todhunter, Mitchell & Co.; Joe Boyd, of Red Rose Tea and Mc. Ecclestone, of Comfort Soap. The London grocers certainly feel very grateful to them for turning out and lending their assistance to make everybody enjoy themselves.

Where, oh where, was ex-president Ranahan and Alf. Johnston, H. J. Glanville, Frank Smythe, Gordon Drake, A. J. Clarke and a few others who ought to have been there.

Tom McCormick is married now. It is said he spent the day at home cutting his lawn.

President Shaw and "Chanceller" Ed. Ryan, were on the water-wagon all day.

Billy Mullins brought the wife and family and spent the day at Belle Isle.

Detroit baseball rooters were materially strengthened by the London visitors.

Cyril Hayes was "afraid to come home in the dark" so stayed over until Thursday. I wonder if Cyril has a girl in Detroit?

ARE BUCKING TORONTO FRUIT MEN.

Growers' Association Discriminates in Favor of Six Houses—The Commissioners' Side.

The joint committee representing the fruit growers of Bronte, Oakville and Clarkson, which interviewed the Toronto commission men recently, with reference to the disposal of this season's crop, owing to the friction over the cartage charge matter, reported to the Growers' Association, "that in the judgment of the joint committee, the best means available for this season is to sell as much fruit as possible at the station; and to consign what is unsold in this way to any one or more of the following Toronto firms: Stronach & Sons, Clemes Bros., J. Bamford, D. Spence, Husband Bros. & Peters, and the Dawson Commission Company."

This means that the six other Toronto commission houses will have to make other arrangements. As the growers in the Niagara peninsula have accepted the cartage propositions as a fair one, and as one-third of the fruit men in the Oakville district are not members of the Growers' Association, these firms are not worrying about the result. If the demand is so great for fruit that they will be unable to procure sufficient supplies then they are quite willing to buy at Oakville or any other place, in which event only the best fruit lines will be taken, leaving on the growers' hands the medium and all other grades below that of the first class.

DOMINION BAKERS' ANNUAL MEETING

Held in Toronto on Wednesday, June 17—Association Given New Name—Discussion on New Bread Bill Entertained by Local Parties.

The annual meeting of the Dominion Master Bakers' Association was held in Toronto on Wednesday, June 17. The principal items of business were the changing of the name of the organization to "The Bread and Cake Manufacturers of Canada," and a discussion on the McNaught Bill, which is to take effect on July 1 next.

The annual meeting usually takes place in August, but it was thought better to hold the convention earlier so as to harmonize the views of the bakers throughout Canada before the bill was enforced. The bill meets the wishes of the bakers fairly well. Whereas in the past the various municipalities passed their own ordinances regulating the inspection and sale of bread, now the Province will look after that matter. One important point considered was whether bakers should raise the price or lower the quality of bread, owing to the Government fixing a standard of one and a half and three pounds. After some discussion it was decided to let the local organizations arrange this to their own satisfaction. The Toronto bakers intend to let the price remain as it is.

One good feature of the bill, so far as the grocers are concerned, is the fact that the bread will in future be inspected in the bakeries. Under the old dispensation a baker might be fined $50 if every loaf in a whole bake did not come up to the weight marked on each and every loaf, and this sometimes led to an injustice being done. Now there must be ten loaves underweight in a bake before fraud can be charged, and a conviction secured; in which case the fine is $5 and costs, or, in event of the fine not being paid, 30 days in jail.

A luncheon at the St. Charles was tendered the delegates by the Toronto board and a banquet at McConkey's in the evening was given all those in attendance by the Fleischmann Yeast Co. An interesting event at this latter function was the presentation of a piece of bronze statuary to the secretary, H. E. Trent, by the members of the association for his untiring efforts in its cause.

The following officers were elected President, A. M. Ewing, Hamilton; 1st Vice-President, R. H. Toyle, Kingston; 2nd Vice-President, J. Ruddy, London; 3rd Vice-President, John Fitzgerald, St. Catharines; Secretary, H. E. Trent, Toronto; Treasurer, A. W. Carrick, Toronto. Executive Committee—Z. Hilton, H. C. Tomlin, Toronto; R. Harrison, Woodstock; A. Lees, Hamilton; W. Pratt, Cobourg.

CO-OPERATIVE BILL DEFERRED.

Senate Refers Measure to Department of Justice for Further Information.

The Co-operative Bill, which has been lying before the Senate for some months, was taken up on Thursday, June 18th, when the Banking and Commerce committee heard Alf. Desjardins in support of the co-operative bill. Among other things he stated that the organization of co-operative societies was the only remedy for usury. In spite of the stringent usury law passed a few years ago, money lenders in Ottawa were declared to be exacting two hundred per cent. interest, right under the shadow of the capitol where the law had been made.

The representatives of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec were heard in opposition to the bill.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell endorsed the principle of co-operation, but said that he had doubts of the constitutionality of the bill. He offered an amendment to defer action on the bill until it had been referred to the Justice Department for opinion as to whether this bill was in the power of Parliament or reserved to the province. This was adopted.

WAS PIONEER IN CANNING INDUSTRY.

Death of Jacob F. Beringer, Founder of Bloomfield Packing Co.

With the death of Jacob F. Beringer at Picton, Ont., on May 23, passed away one of the pioneers of the canning industry in Canada. A resident of Picton for nearly half a century, Mr. Beringer ranked as one of its pioneer business men. He was born in Albany, New York, in 1838, and on first coming to Picton operated a jewelry business. His next connection was with the Century Soap Co., which manufactured soaps and baking powder for a number of years. Ten years ago he became exceedingly interested in the canning industry, and seeing possibilities of development in the locality, took steps to found the Bloomfield Packing Company's factory in Bloomfield. At the time of its establishment this institution was considered a rather large undertaking in Canada, but later years have proved the wisdom of the movement.

For a score of years Mr. Beringer had acted as American Consular agent of Picton. He was of a cheerful and amiable disposition, met everyone with a kindly greeting and will be remembered with regret by almost every citizen of Picton. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, the A.O.U.W. and the I.O.F.

Shortly after making his home in Picton Mr. Beringer was married to Mary Owens, daughter of the late Francis Owens. Mrs. Beringer still survives. Their only son, Frank, who is kindly remembered in Picton, died about ten years ago.

The funeral was held on Tuesday, May 26, and was largely attended by friends and business men of the town and locality.

that could begin to compare with it," and he started out with his little sample-case, a box of polish, a rag, and the assurance from the manager that he could find plenty of paper on the retailer's counters with which to make like demonstrations.

Enthusiasm a Large Factor.

The first dealer encountered told him he had "stove polish to burn." But Fuller had it to sell, and with the effect of the manager's demonstration still firing his brain, he was honestly convinced there was no stove polish on earth like his, and he shined papers galore. The fervor of his enthusiasm reflected an added lustre. His customer was forced to admit he had never seen anything like it, and closed by giving him a good order.

In the same way he sold to the next dealer, and the next; in fact, he worked that street from one end to the other, making forty-seven straight sales in three days without a single break. He made every one of those forty-seven dealers believe what he believed himself concerning that stove polish.

Dealer Forty-eight was a stumbling-block, and came pretty near convincing Fuller that salesmanship was a lost art, besides winning a dollar from him on a wager that all stove polish looked and worked alike, backing up his argument with Fuller's own paper demonstration, made with a polish taken from his own shelf.

Stove polish from head to foot, leaving the grocer in much the same condition, Fuller rushed from the store crushed and defeated. He worked the balance of the day with but little success, making a sale to but one in every eight or ten calls. The few orders he did receive were given him as "complimentary," and out of sympathy for his inexperience. His selling-talk, which had been effective principally in his demonstrations, totally deserted him with Number Forty-eight's knock-out blow.

One day Fuller awoke to the fact that he really had a good article. He had proved it by making forty-seven sales without falling down. He asked himself the question: "Why surrender the fine success I have had at the start because of my experience with Number Forty-eight?"

Pulling himself together, he reasoned out that he had convinced forty-seven dealers that his article was good, and that but one had convinced him that it was no good. Having fought it all out with himself, he determined to make a fresh start, buoyed up with the thought that there were any number of Forty-sevens in his territory. He figured out that he had really possessed some good talking-points, but lost them all on Number Forty-eight.

A Story of Development.

Fortified with new faith in himself and the article he was selling, his first three or four calls showed him that his earlier methods were again working perfectly. Being unusually adept, in a few months Fuller had mastered the main essentials of the stove-polish business, and along with it one of the most valuable lessons in salesmanship—stick-to-it-ive-ness. The outcome of his initial experience is best told in his own words:

"I stuck at it for several months, and began to get acquainted with the trade, and learned that on the west side of the city there was a firm that made stove polish, but had practically no market for its goods, and less knowledge of how to push them. I determined to go over and see just what the conditions were. Examining the product, I pronounced it O.K., and made a statement to the proprietor that I could sell his goods.

"Drawing up his chair, he began picturing to me the worst side of a business man's career that I have ever heard of before or since. Everything in the world seemed to take on a beautiful indigo color. He sat there with his chin between his knees, addressing me in a manner that plainly indicated that he had completely lost his nerve.

"'Young man,' said he, 'the man is not yet born who can sell my polish. I have been plugging away at this business for eight or nine years, and my goods are on the dealers' shelves in the worst possible condition; the cans are rusted out, the polish is hardened, and there is little left of them but a faded label. It is simply out of the question to attempt to regain my lost prestige in the face of all that.'

"While he was outlining his side of a story which too plainly told of a neglected past, I could think of nothing but Number Forty-eight. When he had finished, I asked a few questions relative to what he would do, at the same time thinking of Numbers One, Two and Three, all long the line to Forty-seven.

"The question of my engagement was finally settled on a liberal commission basis, and I got him to agree that in case I should find a few goods of his manufacture on a dealer's shelves in bad condition he would send fresh goods for the bad stock.

"My first day's income was larger by far than anything I had made for any 5 or 6 days' previous effort. I delivered my orders promptly the next morning, but my employer frankly informed me that he did not believe they were honestly taken.

"You can imagine working for an employer of that temperament. I tried to convince him that my orders were honestly taken, and urged him to make an effort to deliver. All the eloquence I could muster failed to move him, until he had sent an insipid three-dollar-a-week clerk around to the dealers to see if the orders were O.K.

"This would not have been so bad had the man who was sent to confirm my work been clever enough to give some plausible excuse for asking such information. Fortune favored me, as I lost but two orders through this procedure. Within a week or ten days I had gained the manufacturer's confidence, and he began to look upon the bright side of things.

"A few months later the sun was shining on both sides of the street for him. What little help he did have was putting in full time instead of working two or three days per week, and we all got along nicely. The manufacturer began to see his way clear; to think in the proper channels; to figure that if one man could sell his goods, somewhere on this earth there were other men who could do the same."

Fuller is now the Western sales manager for a large chemical plant, but is still on friendly terms with his Wheelbarrow friend, the stove-polish manufacturer, who has become wealthy, and owns and controls a large factory. His advertised brand is a household word the country over. He gives Fuller full credit for literally pushing him up the highway of success to a point that enabled him to proceed smoothly, and he can now dictate in the matter of opening up new territories when engaging additional salesmen. And he is particular to have only the best.

Concentration Indispensable.

An indispensable requisite to success is concentration, or devotion to one subject. When that subject is faithful, well-rounded service to one's house, the reward is certain. The man who would do one thing well must not attempt a dozen things, however attractive or inviting. The salesman who would get to the top of his profession must single out each day's work, and into that must pour the whole stream of his activities—all the energies of his hand, eye, tongue, heart and brain. The salesman of single and intense purpose, he who is not tempted with seductive side-line offers, who believes that his house will pay him just as much salary when the proper time comes as has been offered by a neighboring house to entice him away, is the salesman who will accomplish lasting results and is everywhere in demand.

A salesman may be able to show great bursts of speed, but if he runs first forward and then backward, to the right and to the left, with periodical fits of looping the loop in between, he will wind up some day by missing the gap altogether.

The work of a salesman is to sell goods. No salesman has ever yet made his mark in the world of salesmanship who was not possessed with a master passion to see his sales climb higher and higher with each bulletin issued from the sales department.

Fight When on Your Back.

Allan Wilson says: "Fight hardest when you're on your back. Many a down-and-outer would be an up-and-inner if such action had governed them at the crucial times of their careers."

Mr. Wilson tells a good story of the awakening of "Scherer the failure."

Scherer was a failure. He was a miserable sort of a failure. Such a failure was he that his employer told him he was a failure, before all the other salesmen on the force.

Scherer had conducted a small business of his own. Then he became the general agent for his county with the house of the man who later called him down. But it was a small post at best, and so he came into the general office, determined to make a big place for himself on the road.

"Well," said the manager of the sales department, "we haven't got anything against trying a new man."

"But I'm not exactly a new man, Mr. Manager," said he. "I've handled the firm's line for the last fourteen months in Wheatville County. I've sold goods in ——"

"Well, it's a little different on the road," replied the sales manager, "but we can find a territory for you, all right."

So they gave him a territory, and a fairly good one, and Scherer tugged his sample cases to the depot and tried hard to be a real salesman. He was good where he was acquainted and where the house was known. When it came to getting new business he fell down completely. He made a dozen towns in a week, and failed to land one single order; then he got discouraged, and for a week tended only to fixed trade. And when he was turned down he took it to heart.

He managed to hold his position, but continued to be a failure for four long years. Then, as was his custom, his employer held in his private office a reception for the salesmen of the firm.

The Awakening of a Failure.

Everyone was feeling good and mutual expressions of respect and appreciation passed freely about. Times were good, and Scherer's employer was happy in his attitude toward his men. He told them that never had he been so well served by any set of salesmen in his entire career, that never had the firm done so much business, and that never were the promises of the future so bright and rosy. Not a salesman on the staff but had done himself proud, he said.

Then his eye fell on Scherer the failure, over in the corner. The iron in his employer's soul was touched. "That is," he said, "with one exception, Mr. Scherer, who is our weakest salesman, has failed, as customary, to do justice to the firm and to the territory which he travels. However, the other men have done so well that the handicap of one weak man scarcely has been felt."

Scherer never knew how he left the office that day. He went home and sat with his hands in his lap, forcing himself to realize just what the head had said to him. Then he became terribly ashamed. Also he was angry, as men grow angry in silence and alone when they have unpleasant thoughts, and he swore considerably. He didn't sleep that night. He lay awake and cursed himself and his employer with great impartiality.

He was in the city for a week's rest, but the next morning found him packing his trunks and cases for the road. He was on the road all the next day, and at nightfall he walked into the office of a man who had twice before refused to see him. The man each year bought goods of the kind he was selling to the extent of $50,000. This time Scherer walked past the office boy and presented his card himself.

"Mr. Blank, I've come to sell you some goods," said Scherer. "You can't afford to stop me from doing it. Will you give me some time now, or shall I call later?"

The man tore the card into bits. "Damn it," he roared, "where are those office boys?"

"Outside," replied Scherer, calmly. "There was only one. I stuffed him under a bench when he tried to stop me. And here's another card. Now do you think I've got a proposition that can interest you?"

The man looked carefully at the new card and laid it down.

"What's your proposition, Mr. Scherer?"

"Whew! What in the world's happened to Scherer?" said the sales manager two weeks later. "He must have gone crazy. Why—why, he's actually got the record for the sales of last week."

He carried his discovery over to the head, and the old man smiled grimly. "Scherer? Oh, yes. Well, you never can tell what a horse can do until you've tried your hardest whip on him."

"Stick to Business" a Good Rule.

The old saying, "Stick to your business, and your business will stick to you," is the only safe rule for the man who believes that salesmanship is a hop, skip, and jump game, requiring little practice and less brains. We boys used to amuse ourselves with that pastime during recess at school. The hop and the skip looked easy enough on the face of it, and the most awkward of us got along so far without losing our equilibrium or our bets. But the real test came in making the jump. No one could foretell the result of the jump. Balanced on one foot, the spring was made, which ended for most of us amid hoots of derision from our schoolmates. It hurt our feelings and dampened our ardor more than did the header we had taken. It was an exhausting practice, that consumed our energy and our enthusiasm, and how is success possible without enthusiasm?

In urging the importance of sticking to the business of our profession, I do not mean that any man should be a mere salesman, lest he become a one-wheeler on the barrow plan.

The profession of salesmanship has its peculiar tendencies, which more or less dwarf those that devote themselves to it on a narrow-gauge scale, hampering and preventing them from attaining a well-rounded, healthful and whole-souled sphere of usefulness. Is not the mechanic in many cases but an animated machine? Does not the salesman too often get a one-wheeled idea of the road, forgetting that the coach in which he travels is built on eight? And do not his indolence, lack of tact, and lack of practical methods give rise to the idea that salesmen are born and not made?

Selling-success cannot be accomplished with one wheel, two handles, and a prop. Every salesman ought to be something more than a spoke, a cog, or a pulley in our great commercial machine.

Think it over, Brother Wheelbarrow, and determine that it is worth while to be a salesman, cultivating and developing, so far as you can, all your energies on a four-wheeled plan, and then expend your chief labors on getting there by the sole aid of your own motive power—educated enthusiasm.

'TWAS THE AD THAT DID IT!

The travelers of a wholesale house in Montreal had been calling continually on a leading retailer in the City of Quebec, but never could interest him. He was wedded to another house, with whom he always dealt generously. The Montreal wholesale house was advertising a special white shirt in the Dry Goods Review. Their traveler called as usual on the Quebec retailer, but received a polite "No thank you" in answer to a request to look at the traveler's samples at the Chateau Frontenac. But just as he was going out the door, making a mental note of another disappointment, the manager of the store called out "By the way, is it your firm that is advertising a special dress shirt?" "Yes," the traveler replied. "Alright, I will go and look at the samples." Before he left the Chateau, the retailer had not only ordered a line of shirts but gave him an order for a number of other things; and this was the beginning of a good business that has been held ever since. Just shows how trade paper advertising helps the traveler.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, June 25.

It is certainly gratifying to observe the continued good receipts of cheese and now it may be hoped that we will soon be ahead of the record for 1907. This is very satisfactory in view of the fact that the start of the season was not as encouraging as it might have been but now any doubt about the probability of 1908 being an exceptionally good year has pretty much disappeared. In our last weeks bulletin we quoted the words of a recently returned visitor to the Old Country. He expressed the fact, or so-called fact, that Canada's day in the English Cheese market was about over owing to the better attention paid to Englishmen's wants and requirements by the New Zealand and Australian exporters. At the time this gentleman's words sounded a bit pessimistic, but in any case they contained a sufficient amount of truth to convey a warning to the Canadian shippers who have neglected the requirements of the market.

It has been pointed out by Mr. Ruddick that the excessive amounts of cheese which have been offered in the British markets has been due to the fact that in New Zealand many of the factories which formerly made butter are now making cheese, finding the manufacture of this commodity more remunerative. So many factories producing butter turned into cheese factories that at the present time butter is again beginning to attract their attention and it is predicted that they will not have so much time to study the English requirements but will be kept busy supplying their own market.

All this goes to prove the contention that the milk supply has not increased in New Zealand but has rather fallen off if anything and up to the present nearly all the milk supply has been turned into cheese. This lop-sided production has led to its prominence in the British markets. Here it may be said that the volume of a country's export business cannot always be taken as a criterion of its prosperity from the very fact that its internal progress may be so great as to keep everyone busy without thinking about cultivating any outside patronage. Receipts during the week have been good, the Board of Trade returns showing the following figures: For the week ending June 20, 1908, 76,183 boxes against 98,956 boxes for the corresponding week of last year. For the season of 1908 up to June 20, 1908, receipts stood at 287,740 boxes against 362,550 boxes for the same period of last year. Shipments were as follows for last week: From Montreal, 80,193 boxes as compared with 52,881 boxes for the corresponding week of last year. Total shipments from Montreal since May 1, 274188 boxes against 342,776 boxes for the same period of 1907.

The latest quotations of cheese are: Ontario, 11⅞-12; Townships, 11⅞-11⅞; Quebec, 11½-11⅝. Cornwall has agreed with Retail Merchants' Association upon regular day for holding sales. The day selected was Friday.

Butter, like cheese, has gone forward owing to higher prices in the country. The supplies arriving while plentiful, are not quite as good as a few weeks previously. Finest Eastern Townships is worth, according to latest quotations, 24-24¼; Quebec sections, 23½-23¾; Ontario dairies, 20-21c. It is though that the fine pasturage which the cows are enjoying will more than compensate for the shortage in cows. The make is increasing and is of a very high quality. Receipts were for the week ending June 20, 1908, 19 964 packages against 18,403 packages for same week last year and seasons up to date compare as follows: 76,003 packages for 1908 and 90,343 packages for 1907.

Exports for last week were 7,751 packages against 1,874 packages for same week last year and the season's record is 11,486 packages against 1,793 packages for 1907.

THE PROVISION SITUATION

Toronto, June 24, 1908.

A sudden strengthening of bacon prices in England and a consequent improved tone in local circles is the feature in the Canadian packing industry this week.

Quotations on the British market have advanced from 6d to 1s, and this, being unexpected, will have a stimulating effect on business here. The reason for this advance has not been stated, though it seems probable that the somewhat lighter exports of Danish and American bacon for the past two or three weeks have allowed the market to clear to some slight extent.

Last week the Danish "killings" were 38,000, which is a good average, though far below some of the heavy "killings" reported for some weeks earlier in the year. The American shipments, too, were fairly light so that on the whole the situation seems to offer an opportunity for rather more business to be done by Canadian houses than has been possible for some weeks.

As a result of the firmer tone, prices for hogs have suffered about 15 cents above last week's quotations. Packers are trying to buy at $6.10 to $6.15, f.o.b., but the general price is a little higher. The advance is contrary to expectations last week, when lower prices seemed probable. Deliveries during the week were fairly heavy, though the quality was none too good.

Conditions prevalent in the American markets are summarized in the following from the New York Journal of Commerce:

The past week has been characterized by more strength and activity in the option market for hog products, but it has been a forced movement by the packers apparently to enable them to sell futures against their current production. Consumption of meats has improved and prices have advanced ½c or more on hams and less on bacon, with a little better Southern and domestic demand for both, but other products have not improved in demand either home or export, and lard has been especially neglected. Stocks are not decreasing, except in meats and prices are higher for a bull movement, which was begun too early in the season for hard times, whereas low prices during the winter season might have reduced stocks to a point where a bull movement now would have been in order. The supply of hogs recently has fallen off and for the week has been 100,000 behind last year, but a good deal of it is due to the floods in the West, Kansas City having received none for fully a week, while St. Louis ran light and even Omaha was somewhat affected.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—Canadian short cut mess pork has gone forward 50c. The stronger feeling in pork is due to advance in prices of Canadian goods in foreign markets and small supplies coming forward here. The demand for provisions during the week has been very good dealers having been kept busy with a goodly supply of small orders. There has been a marked absence of large wholesale commands.

When writing advertisers kindly mention having seen the advertisement in this paper.

BUTTER—The butter market is higher this week, 23⅜c to 23¾c being paid at the boards on Saturday. Local trade is somewhat quiet, and it is thought present prices will not be maintained for long. The prices exporters are obliged to pay is higher than they can realize, consequently exporting has fallen off again. Receipts are large, owing to fine natural conditions existing in the country.

CHEESE—The cheese market is higher this week owing to better prices in the country. Receipts are good. Good weather brings good pasturage and then the make increases in volume. The export trade is very good. Prices at the country boards run from 11⅝c to 11⅞c. The local demand has been good.

EGGS—The market has displayed considerable weakness owing to the continued large supplies arriving, and the fact that a large proportion of them are bad. The continued hot weather has had a bad effect on the quality of eggs, and as a reflex the price has suffered. The demand, although good, is not up to the last few weeks. Supplies are not quite as large as they were during the past few weeks. Prices locally are easier.

PROVISIONS—Business generally is above normal and though prices remain much the same as a week ago, there is an indication that the market is improving. Bacon lines were in demand during the warm days and for the next few weeks are expected to be the feature of the market. A further slight decline in lard is expected soon. Hams are about the same as last week and are rather firm.

BUTTER—Prices continue rather high for this commodity, and firmness is noted in all grades. Supplies are not so free this week. Demand is good and packing is being done on all sides. The hot weather was expected to pull down the price, but so far this has not happened. Just now there is competition by buyers in the country, and farmers do not appear very anxious to sell unless at their own price.

TO ORGANIZE SALMON CANNERIES

Movement to Associate All Factories in British Columbia.

An advice from a correspondent in Vancouver says that a movement is on foot to organize all the salmon canneries in the Province under one association. The object is to divide expenses and to place the industry in the Province on a more satisfactory basis.

The Fraser River Cannery Association, organized for some years, has done good work, but in off years when only a few of the plants are in operation, those lying idle are forced to pay their share of the expense and trouble has arisen. It is believed that if all the canneries are in one organization the proportionate burden would be comparatively light, and that the association would be mutually advantageous.

FLOUR AND CEREALS EASIER

Optimistic Crop Reports and Large Deliveries Reflect on Markets—Flour Down 20 cents, Oatmeal 25 cents Per Bag.

The continued optimistic reports as to crop conditions from all over Canada have had a reflective effect on the wheat and flour markets. This fact, too, is accelerated by large deliveries of grain of all kinds. As a result of the reports farmers see easier prices in sight and are rushing in their grain before a material drop occurs.

As a result of this the week has seen a drop of 20c in Ontario flours, following the decline in Manitobas a couple of weeks ago. Large oat supplies in Ontario have also caused a drop of 25c per bag, though Quebec markets are even a little firmer.

The decline in prices will probably materially increase export business. Already the year's exports in flour are above that of last year, and this week's decline will put matters on a still more favorable basis. Both Quebec and Ontario firms are shipping largely to Great Britain and are looking forward to increased business. The break in the canal bank at Cornwall on Tuesday, which will interrupt shipping for some time, will, unfortunately, affect Ontario shippers' business to some extent.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—Royal Household and Glenora are now being quoted at $6.10 and $5.50, instead of $6.20 and $5.70. Other lines remain the same. The demand during the week has not been very brisk. "Hand to mouth" about expresses the condition of affairs during the past week.

ROLLED OATS—Oatmeal is easier, fine, standard and granulated now being quoted at $3. Rolled oats is a little stronger, the maximum price now being five cents ahead of last week's quotations for 80-lb. bags, but barrels are cheaper, now being quoted at $5.90. There has been little doing in this line during the week. The demand was slow.

FLOUR—Dull markets and large supplies have provided for an easier feeling and a decline of 20c in Ontario wheat is noted this week. Manitoba grades remain at prices reached after the decline two weeks ago. The present basis permits of rather better export business being done. Prices now quoted are:

Winter Wheat.

CEREALS—Manufacturers report fair business. Large supplies of oats from farmers at local points and an easy market have forced a decline in oatmeal of 25c per bag. Prices now stand as follows:

Rolled wheat in barrels, 100 lbs	3 00
" oats in bags, per bag 90 lbs	2 60

A VISITOR FROM AUSTRALIA.

President of Brisbane Grocers' Association in Canada This Week.

T. J. Barry, president of the Brisbane Grocers' Association, of Brisbane, Queensland, Australia, was in Toronto this week and called on several members of the trade. Mr. Barry is making a tour in different parts of the world studying trade conditions and also trade organization. He came from San Francisco to Chicago, after visiting Vancouver and Victoria, and goes from Toronto to Ottawa and Montreal, and finally to New York. Mr. Barry is quite enthusiastic over the success of the association movement in Brisbane.

"Yes, we have quite a comprehensive organization," he said, "not only composed of grocers, but with the different sections of trade organized in departments under a general secretary similar to your Retail Merchants' Association. The sections are strongly organized but the general body maintains a debt collector and also a list of deadhead customers."

"What do you think of the outlook for Australian raisins," Mr. Barry was asked.

"The business is steadily growing," was the reply, "and is bound in a few years to be a big feature. For some time scarcely any other raisins than the local stock have been sold in the country and their superiority is bound to give them a place. We are looking for large business in Canada.

"Our currants are coming to be favorably known also," said Mr. Barry, "and at present about half the local demand is supplied with Australian stock."

Mr. Barry was much pleased with Canada, on this his first trip and speaks with enthusiasm of the outlook for mutual trade development.

A. H. Brittain, Montreal, was calling on the trade in Toronto this week.

SOMETHING REGARDING GLUTEN.

Do you know anything about the nature of gluten? Well, spend ten minutes and find out—not all about it, but something about it. Obtain a heaping tablespoonful of white flour. Add a little water to it in a saucer and dough it into a compact ball. Turn on the tap in the sink and let the water drip from your hands as you roll the ball between your palms. The ball will grow less and less, and the water will be white with starch cells held in suspension. In ten minutes mor or less, the water will run clean and clear and you appear to have a nodule of yellow, firm vegetable gum, which you are tempted to call "pure" gluten. Become a gum chewer for once and keep a-chewing for a couple of hours. At the end of this time the quantity of gluten is less than when you took it from the hydrant. What has happened? You have simply mechanically crushed and broken the gummy mass, exposing the infinitesimally fine starch cells to the moisture of the mouth and the washing out of the raw insoluble starch has continued, just an extension of the sink washing process, with greater mechanical elaboration to expose the entangled starch cell. Now take the piece of gluten to an analytic chemist. When his report comes in you read "starch 15 or 18 or maybe 20 per cent., gluten 85, 82 or 80 per cent." and begin to appreciate for the first time what real gluten is.—Scientific American.

A PIECE OF CHALK

Time was when a piece of chalk was the accountant's most approved instrument. When a charge was made it was "chalked up." When it was paid it was rubbed out—and there you are. Easy enough, but—are just as simple. And ten thousand merchants in America and foreign countries consider them better.

Give them a trial. Begin in a small way if you like, but TRY THEM and see for yourself how much better they are than any other method of accounting.

The Plan:

If a man wants credit for $10.00 and you think he is good for it, give him a $10.00 Allison Coupon Book, and have him sign the receipt or note form in front of book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10.00—no trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten-cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10.00 and gets another book. No pass-books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes. Allison Coupon Books are recognized everywhere as the best. For sale by the jobbing trade everywhere.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Canadian Fruits to the Fore—Cherries and Gooseberries—Imported Lines Coming in Freely—Vegetables and Fish in Good Demand.

The Canadian markets are now being devoted principally to handling Canadian fruits. The strawberry season is in full swing, and before consumers are yet accustomed to this first fruit cherries have made their appearance. A few cranberries are noted at some centres.

Imported peaches and plums are making a bid for popularity with the more staple orange and banana, and are going off fairly well. Fruit dealers report excellent business being done and believe that with the abnormal crop this year a new record will be established, despite the fact that numerous complaints of "hard times" were heard earlier in the year.

Vegetables and fish lines remain much as they have been for the past couple of weeks, and good business is being done.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS — The price of bananas remains close around $2. One house, which makes a specialty of bananas states that their trade is in advance of any previous year in this fruit. Cocoanuts have declined 50c, now being quoted at $4. Valencia oranges have advanced about $1.50. Canadian strawberries are coming down in price, now being quoted as low as 10c per basket. Apricots, peaches and plums have dropped 50c. in 4-basket crates. The week has been a fairly good one in the fruit trade.

VEGETABLES—The vegetable market has remained as constant during the last week as it has perhaps at any time during the past year. Practically no barrel cabbage is left on the market, and the price of the new has not altered since the last quotation. Florida tomatoes (crates) are very scarce, being pretty well off the market. There were a few big lots of potatoes sold last week at 80c on track, but in ordinary amounts Green Mountains are bringing $1 per bushel. There has been a very good demand during the week.

FISH—The season for Gaspe salmon is now on, and the price is low. Halibut and haddock are in good demand. Pike and whitefish have advanced slightly, now being quoted at 7c and 10c respectively. Mackerel have advanced two cents since last quotation, now being quoted at 10c. Other lines remain the same as last week. The demand during the week was fair.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—The Toronto fruit warehouses are better able to handle business now that the summer fruit market is open. Of course it means that larger staffs must be employed, but the merchants are prepared for this and are calling in their travelers and buyers to held handle the goods and look after the welfare of customers. Canadian fruits now have the run. Strawberries of A1 quality are coming in from the Oakville district in large consignments and cherries from the Welland district, too, are being received. A few crates of imported raspberries were seen. These are retailing as high as 25 cents a quart. One basket of Canadian gooseberries from St. Catharines were regarded somewhat as a novelty. Prices of imported staple fruit have declined with the advent of California and Georgia fruits. Nearly every line has been reduced in price.

TORONTO FRUIT MARKET OPEN.

The Toronto summer fruit market, in the old Great Western Railway station, at the foot of Yonge Street, reopened for the season on Monday last, June 22. The G. T. R. has enlarged and remodelled the old structure and treated it to liberal doses of paint and whitewash. The partitions have been removed and the interior now looks bright and airy. The commission men are pleased with the new arrangement and already all the floor space has been taken. The tracks will accommodate 16 cars at a time, and since the opening of the market they have been pretty fully occupied by loaded fruit cars. When the pavement approaches are completed the new market will present a smart, business-like appearance.

R. Stewart, formerly a Hamilton grocery traveler, who has been in Texas for some time for the benefit of his health, called at the Toronto office of The Grocer on Monday.

FACTS ABOUT GROCERIES

Where Mocha Coffee Comes From—Something About Pistachio Nuts—Tea as a Medicine—Information for Grocers and Clerks.

Mocha Coffee.

The very best Mocha coffee is shipped from Aden, says a resident there. It comes on camels from the province of Yemen. It is raised by the natives, each family having a few bushes about the house, and producing only enough for home use and a little for trading. There are no big plantations and no coffee factories. The berries are gathered when ripe and dried in the sun. After this they are put up in bales and carried on camel back over the hills to this place. They are hulled between millstones turned by hand and are then winnowed and sorted for shipment. The latter work is done by the women, who look over each grain carefully and take out the bad ones. Labor is cheap, but the coffee has to go through many hands. It pays toll to the chiefs of the tribes who own the country through which it is carried, and as a result it must be sold at high prices. For this reason we have imitations of Mocha coffee from all parts of the world. During my stay on the plantations of Brazil I have seen them label bags of Mocha, and Guatemala and other coffees are sold under the same name. Just now they are bringing coffees from Ceylon and Java to Aden and transhipping them. They lie in the warehouses for a few weeks, and then go forth remarked and perhaps rebagged as Arabian Mocha.—Grocery.

About Pistachio Nuts.

These are the fruit of a kind of turpentine tree called by botanists pistachio vera, a native of Western Asia and much cultivated in the Greek Islands. The tree grows 10 to 30 feet high in several countries around the Mediterranean, also in Persia and Mexico. It is an evergreen, and has small flowers without petals, from which spring the oblong and pointed or olive-shaped droops, not unlike filberts in size and shape, and are known under various names as above. The kernel, of a bright greenish color, is very pleasant, rich and oily, and is covered with a yellowish or reddish outer husk or skin, but which splits into two halves when fully ripe. It loses much of its beauty in drying, but improves in flavor. It closely resembles a sweet almond to the taste. Pistachio kernels are mostly used as a dessert fruit, but also in French confectionery and in perfumery.

Tea As a Germicide.

It cannot be too well known that tea made in the ordinary way for table use is an excellent preventive of some of the diseases caused by germs, and is more especially recommended as a safeguard against the insidious and dangerous germs of typhoid. In an article recently published in a medical journal it is stated that even when water is properly sterilized, it may become infected afterwards and vessels once used for contaminated water are capable of transmitting infection for a long time, but tea seems to render chance contamination with typhoid bacillus harmless within a few hours. For these reasons army medical officers suggest cold tea as a substitute for water in soldiers' canteen bottles on actual service. In the article alluded to medical opinion is quoted that tea, properly made, is a harmless stimulant, and may be drunk continually without ill effect; a wide knowledge of the virtues of tea would undoubtedly make it a more popular beverage, for it is not only healthful and stimulating, but it is also very economical to use.

PASSED AWAY IN MONTREAL.

C. B. Knox, the Gelatine Manufacturer, Died on Holiday Trip.

C. B. Knox, the gelatine manufacturer, of Johnstown, N.Y., passed away at the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, on Wednesday, June 17, after a brief illness.

Mr. Knox had passed through the city a couple of weeks before, when with two sons, he was on the way to the Laurentian Club in the north of the province, on a fishing expedition. While in the mountains he was taken seriously ill, and was brought back to the hospital, where he died. Mr. Knox had been ill for some time, but he had almost completely recovered, and was thought to be out of danger.

F. Creed, who represents F. F. Dalley Co., Hamilton, in the western provinces, has returned to the west after a short trip to headquarters. He called at the Winnipeg office of The Canadian Grocer last week.

YOU CAN SELL MORE CANNED GOODS IF YOU HANDLE

FARMER BRAND

It has that delicious quality which makes people like canned fruits and vegetables as well as they like the fresh, green article, because it is delivered fresh from our own fields as we direct. Wherever FARMER BRAND is offered to the public, the grocers who handle it are doing a much brisker business than the grocers who are handling other and inferior brands. Now is the time to make up your mind to keep well in the front of your competitors by handling only the real Farmer Brand--the brand which is perennially pleasing to particular people.

RISING SUN STOVE POLISH IN CAKES

& SUN PASTE STOVE POLISH IN TINS

Chicago may follow example set in New York where manufacture and sale of inflammable and explosive liquid stove polishes is forbidden on account of the dangerous nature of this material when used by housekeepers.

A recommendation has been introduced into Chicago City Council calling attention to repeated accidents and a recent horrible death in Chicago from this cause and calling attention also to protection from like accidents, secured by ordinance in New York City.

Push RISING SUN Stove Polish and SUN PASTE Stove Polish which are always safe in the hands of the user. They please the housekeeper too. Good profit in them besides.

"ROOM AT THE TOP"

ESTABLISHED 1879

An excellent motto for every professional or business man.

Innumerable by-paths promise temporary advantage, but they lead nowhere, except perhaps to disaster.

There was a place "at the top" for

and they stay there, because they have not deviated from the path of Purity and Uniformity in all the changes of Coffee production since the first step of their progress.
